The US in Afghanistan: The Longest War

by Aryn Baker, TIME/Afghanistan

Seven and a half years after US troops arrived in Afghanistan following the attacks of September 11, 2001, the war there is more deadly—and more muddled—than ever. When American troops first went to Afghanistan, they did so to overthrow the Taliban regime, which then ruled the nation and provided a haven for al-Qaeda. In less than three months, the Taliban was defeated, and a US-supported administration, headed by Pres. Hamid Karzai, was installed in Kabul. Yet in 2009, the US is still fighting the Taliban, and al-Qaeda operatives are still plotting from Afghanistan. (Taliban, these days, no longer refers just to the Islamic extremist regime that once ruled the country; the word has become synonymous with any number of antigovernment forces.)

And one part of the region's deadly muddle has gotten worse. In 2001 there were fears that the war in Afghanistan would destabilize Pakistan. (The Pashtun ethnic group, which makes up a large part of the Taliban insurgency, straddles the border between the two countries.) Those fears are now reality; the Pakistani Taliban threatens nuclear-armed Pakistan's viability as a state even more than its cousins jeopardize Afghanistan's.

It is because the war in Afghanistan threatens to destabilize an entire region that it has become America's biggest foreign policy challenge. On 18 Feb 2009, President Obama committed an additional 17,000 troops to Afghanistan; when they all arrive, there will be about 55,000 troops there from the US, plus 37,000 from its allies. The latest Afghan war is now Obama's war. The administration has signaled that it is downsizing expectations about what can still be achieved: the principal goal now is to counter terrorism and bring a degree of stability to Afghanistan—not to turn a poor and fractious nation into a flourishing democratic state.

When Obama laid out his new strategy, he made it clear that the mark of success would be the ability “to disrupt, dismantle, and defeat al-Qaeda in Pakistan and Afghanistan and to prevent their return to either country in the future.” But accomplishing even that comparatively limited objective at this stage will require a massive and sustained US commitment—one that involves more than military boots on the ground. Al-Qaeda still thrives in the ungoverned tribal areas along the border between the two countries, and while many of its members have been killed, new recruits quickly take their place. US soldiers have learned that to deny al-Qaeda a foothold in Afghanistan will require the establishment of a government that Afghans can believe in, the security that allows them to support it, and jobs that provide an alternative to fighting. “We are not going to kill our way out of this war,” says Lieut. Col. Brett Jenkinson, commander of the US battalion stationed in the Korengal valley. “What we need is a better recruiting pitch for disaffected youth. You can’t build hope with military might. You build it through development and good governance.”

Other than leading by example, the military can do little to bolster faith in the state. As part of his plan, Obama has proposed a civilian surge—a phalanx of mentors for the Afghans. Much of the more than US$32 billion that the US government has spent in aid to Afghanistan since 2002 has gone through the military or its provincial reconstruction teams. The projects are designed to earn goodwill for foreign forces as much as for local governors, but they also have the unintended consequence of undermining the central government, which never gets a chance to take credit for providing basic services such as roads, electricity, and education. “We aren’t here to win hearts and minds,” says Jeremy Brenner, a US State Department adviser based in Jalalabad. “What we need is to engender hope and faith in the Afghan government.”

The experience of the Americans fighting in the nation's eastern Korengal Valley illustrates how difficult this war is. Over the period from July 2008 to April 2009, Bravo Company, a 150-strong unit of the 1st Battalion, 26th Infantry Regiment, lost seven men in the Korengal while trying to cool down a toxic cauldron of local insurgents, Taliban leaders, foreign jihadis, and al-Qaeda members. Here success cannot be measured in territory gained, schools built, or clinics opened. Irrigation pipes and water pumps are blown up by the insurgents as soon as they are built. Sometimes progress is so slow it feels like a stalemate, admits company commander Capt. James Howell. But, he says, “if we can reach a point where the villagers want to work with us and the Taliban are the only thing stopping them, that’s success.”

A government in which people have hope would be one that offers them security. The US exit strategy for Afghanistan, according to Adm. Mike Mullen, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, is to strengthen the Afghan forces so they can protect the fragile advances of the government. To that end, Obama has pledged 4,000 trainers and mentors to help boost the Afghan National Army and police.

But success in Afghanistan will mean nothing if fighters can find sanctuary in Pakistan. Commanders in Afghanistan say the battle next door will be far more complicated than anything they have seen, simply because the Pakistani military doesn’t have the skills and resources to conduct an effective counterinsurgency. US-operated Predator drones have successfully targeted al-Qaeda leadership in the border areas, but at the cost of inflaming the Pashtun-led insurgency on the Pakistani side. Stabilizing Afghanistan might well become crucial to preventing the far more terrifying prospect of an Islamic extremist takeover in Pakistan. Says US Army Brig. Gen. John Nicholson, Jr., who commands US and NATO troops in southern Afghanistan: “If the Pashtun population of Pakistan sees a moderate, Islamic and Pashtun-led government in Afghanistan, well, it’s hard to argue with. So we have potentially a greater impact in Pakistan with success in the east.”

Getting it right in both Afghanistan and Pakistan now, after years of Western drift and inattention, will come at a heavy price in American money and lives. Having doubled down in the hopes of winning in Afghanistan, the Obama administration has no choice but to live with the consequences.

How Twitter Will Change the Way We Live

by Steven Johnson for TIME

The one thing you can say for certain about Twitter is that it makes a terrible first impression. You hear about this new service that lets you send 140-character updates to your "followers," and you think, Why does the world need this, exactly? It's not as if we were all sitting around four years ago scratching our heads and saying, "If only there were a technology that would allow me to send a message to my 50 friends, alerting them in real time about my choice of breakfast cereal."

The basic mechanics of Twitter are remarkably simple. Users publish tweets—those 140-character messages—from a computer or mobile device. As a social network, Twitter revolves around the principle of followers. When you choose to follow another Twitter user, that user's tweets appear in reverse chronological order on your main Twitter page. If you follow 20 people, you'll see a mix of tweets scrolling down the page: breakfast-cereal updates, interesting new links, music recommendations, even musings on the future of education. The mix creates a media experience quite unlike anything that has come before it, strangely intimate and at the same time celebrity-obsessed. You glance at your Twitter feed over that first cup of coffee, and in a few seconds you find out that your nephew got into med school and Shaquille O'Neal just finished a cardio workout in Phoenix.

But the key development with Twitter is how we've jury-rigged the system to do things that its creators never dreamed of. The most fascinating thing about Twitter is not what it's doing to us. It's what we're doing to it.

This is not just a matter of people finding a new use for a tool designed to do something else. In Twitter's case, the users have been redesigning the tool itself. The convention of grouping a topic or event by the "hashtag"—#hackedu or #inauguration—was spontaneously invented by the Twitter user base (as was the convention of replying to another user with the @ symbol). The ability to search a live stream of tweets was developed by another start-up altogether, Summize, which Twitter purchased last year. Thanks to these innovations, following a live feed of tweets about an event—a political debate or a Lost episode—has become a central part of the Twitter experience. But as recently as 2008, that mode of interaction would have been technically impossible using Twitter. It's like inventing a toaster oven and then looking around a year later and seeing that your customers have of their own accord turned it into a microwave.

One of the most telling facts about the Twitter platform is that the vast majority of its users interact with the service via software created by third parties. There are dozens of iPhone and BlackBerry applications—all created by enterprising amateur coders or small start-ups—that let you manage Twitter feeds. There are services that help you upload photos and link to them from your tweets and programs that map other Twitizens who are near you geographically.

As the tools have multiplied, we're discovering extraordinary new things to do with them. In June 2009, when Iranians rose up to protest a rigged election, supporters around the world followed the demonstrations in real time on Twitter. Two months earlier, an anticommunist uprising in Moldova was organized via Twitter. Twitter has become so widely used among political activists in China that the government blocked access to it for a period, in an attempt to censor discussion of the 20th anniversary of the Tiananmen Square massacre.

The rapid-fire innovation we're seeing around Twitter is not new, of course. Facebook, whose audience is still several times as large as Twitter's, went from being a way to scope out the most attractive college freshmen to the Social Operating System of the Internet, supporting a vast ecosystem of new applications created by major media companies, individual hackers, game creators, political groups, and charities. The Apple iPhone's long-term competitive advantage may well prove to be the more than 15,000 new applications that have been developed for the device, expanding its functionality in countless ingenious ways.

The history of the Web followed a similar pattern. A platform originally designed to help scholars share academic documents, it now lets you watch television shows, play poker with strangers around the world, publish your own newspaper, rediscover your high-school girlfriend—and, yes, tell the world what you had for breakfast. The speed with which users have extended Twitter's platform points to a larger truth about modern innovation. When we talk about innovation and global competitiveness, we tend to fall back on the easy metric of patents and Ph.D.'s. It turns out the US share of both has been in steady decline since peaking in the early 1970s. Since the mid-1980s, a long progression of doomsayers have warned that our declining market share in the patents-and-Ph.D.'s business augurs dark times for American innovation.

But what actually happened to American innovation during that period? We came up with America Online, Netscape, Amazon, Google, Blogger, Wikipedia, Craigslist, TiVo, Netflix, eBay, the iPod and iPhone, Xbox, Facebook, and Twitter itself. Sure, we didn't build the Prius or the Wii, but if you measure global innovation in terms of actual lifestyle-changing hit products and not just grad students, the US has been lapping the field for the past 20 years.

How could the forecasts have been so wrong? The answer is that we've been tracking only part of the innovation story, ignoring what Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor Eric von Hippel calls "end-user innovation," in which consumers actively modify a product to adapt it to their needs. In its short life, Twitter has been a hothouse of end-user innovation: the hashtag; searching; its 11,000 third-party applications; all those creative new uses of Twitter—some of them banal, some of them spam, and some of them sublime.

This is what I ultimately find most inspiring about the Twitter phenomenon. We are living through the worst economic crisis in generations, with apocalyptic headlines threatening the end of capitalism as we know it, and yet in the middle of this chaos, the engineers at Twitter headquarters are scrambling to keep the servers up, application developers are releasing their latest builds, and ordinary users are figuring out all the ingenious ways to put these tools to use. There's a kind of resilience here that is worth savoring. The weather reports keep announcing that the sky is falling, but here we are—millions of us—sitting around trying to invent new ways to talk to one another.

Skyrocketing Food Prices: A Global Crisis

by Janet H. Clark

As the year 2008 got under way, upwardly spiraling food prices became of increasing concern to international organizations and relief agencies, national governments, and consumers everywhere. UN officials speculated that the crisis could add an additional 100 million hungry people to the billion already living on less than US$1 a day, the common measure of absolute poverty. The impact of rising food prices was greatest in less-developed countries (LDCs), where spending on food accounted for 40–60% of income, compared with about 15% in industrialized countries.

Even in industrialized countries, poor families were being severely affected by a general rise in prices, especially when combined with an economic downturn and higher unemployment. Food prices in the 30 Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) member countries rose by 7.2% year on year in both July and August, the biggest increases since 1990, and in the US the Department of Labor reported that grocery-store food prices rose by 6.6% in 2008, the largest increase since 1980.

With spiking food costs came a growing threat to food security, which provoked political repercussions in many LDCs. In Haiti, for example, food riots led to the ousting of Prime Minister Jacques-Édouard Alexis on 12 April, and the lack of a replacement until July left the government in a state of paralysis while social and economic conditions continued to deteriorate.

Prices of staple foodstuffs escalated alarmingly on world markets. In the first half of the year, the price of internationally traded food commodities, led by grains, rose by 56%. In the first quarter alone, the prices of wheat and corn (maize) rose by 130% and 30%, respectively, over the same period a year earlier, while the cost of rice climbed 10% in both February and March. By midyear the prices of corn, wheat, and soybeans had more than doubled, while that of rice had tripled.

A number of factors contributed to the increases in food prices. One was the economic emergence of China and India, whose populations were becoming increasingly affluent and thus boosting their food consumption; in China annual per capita consumption of meat rose to 54 kg (about 119 lb) from 20 kg (44 lb) in 1985. Another major factor was the increased output of biofuels made from grains and oilseeds in the US and the European Union, where there were generous—and controversial—tax concessions or direct financial support for producers, retailers, or users of biofuels. In July an OECD report strongly criticized these incentives as costly and ineffective and recommended that governments refocus their policies. Partially associated with this was the restrictive and trade-distorting effect of a high level of government support to farmers in many OECD countries, which in 2007 amounted to US$258 billion, or 23% of farm incomes. A surge in petroleum prices led to increased fertilizer and transport costs. In many countries adverse weather led to crop failure, speculation on commodity markets, and hoarding. When Cyclone Nargis struck Myanmar (Burma) on 2 May, it generated a 4-m (12-ft)-high storm surge that devastated the rice-producing Irrawaddy delta. During August and September, Haiti, already suffering from food shortages, was battered by four successive hurricanes. The depreciation of the US dollar against the euro and other currencies early in the year contributed to the rise in dollar-denominated commodity prices. The International Food Policy Research Institute (IFPRI) estimated that 15–27% of the increase was from the dollar's decline. At the same time, countries in Asia and the Middle East that linked their currencies to the weakening dollar experienced overheated economies and suffered higher prices than countries with more flexible exchange rates.

The World Food Programme (WFP) was the main distributor of emergency food relief, with activities in more than 75 countries. In March, however, the organization announced that it was short of money because of the soaring price of cereals and other foodstuffs. At the UN heads of government meeting in June, the WFP reported that it had received US$1.2 billion in aid, including an unexpected US$500 million from Saudi Arabia. Among 60 low-income food-deficit countries surveyed early in the year by the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), the most widespread response was to remove or reduce import tariffs on food. This was especially true in South and East Asia, the Middle East, and North Africa. Given that tariff levels on cereals and vegetable oils were already relatively low, however, at 8% and 14%, respectively, only small proportions of the price rises were offset.

In the Middle East, drought reduced the summer harvest, and many major wheat-producing countries, including Iran, Iraq, and Syria, were forced to increase imports. In Saudi Arabia the annual inflation rate soared to 10.6% in June, its highest rate in 30 years, and wheat production was extremely costly because of huge farm subsidies. The Saudi government decided in August that it would make economic sense to outsource its farming and was considering the purchase of rice farms in Thailand through a new investment fund set up to buy agricultural land overseas. United Arab Emirates investors looking for land for agricultural development favored Pakistan, Kazakhstan, and The Sudan.

In early May, Prime Minister Samak Sundaravej of Thailand (the world's biggest rice producer) proposed the formation of a cartel of Southeast Asian rice-producing countries (including Vietnam, Myanmar, Laos, and Cambodia) to be set up along the lines of OPEC. Laos and Cambodia favored the idea, but there were strong protests in the Philippines, the world's biggest rice importer. In August Thailand announced plans to boost rice production by leasing 160,000 ha (395,000 ac) of unused state land to poor farmers and agribusiness for biofuel crops, sugarcane, palm, and rice. A more novel way of easing food shortages was proposed in July by scientists at the National Autonomous University of Mexico; they asserted that insects, which were nutritious and already provided part of the diet in 113 countries, should be consumed more widely. Thailand, where cricket rearing for food was already practiced by many families, hosted an FAO conference to examine the benefits of insects as a food option.

“UN officials speculated that the crisis could add an additional 100 million hungry people to the billion already living on less than US$1 a day, the common measure of absolute poverty.”

At an EU summit in July, member countries were divided on trade reform and the need to remove agricultural subsidies and reduce protectionism. For the first time, in 2008 the EU did not use the portion of its agricultural budget designated for buying and stockpiling surplus produce. The resulting unused funds, expected to reach €1 billion (about US$1.4 billion), were to be given to farmers in LDCs through 2009. Cut-price discount stores, which were already popular in the US, were proliferating in Europe and putting pressure on the more costly chains. The search for cheaper food was gathering momentum even in US cities, where there was a resurgence of so-called freegans, who scavenged through supermarket garbage bins and other sources of discarded food.

Despite the widespread fear of a continuing rise in global inflation and the number of people needing food aid, the failure to reach agreement on trade liberalization left agricultural producers in LDCs at a continuing disadvantage. The IFPRI calculated that if export bans by some 40 food-exporting countries were lifted, cereal prices would be 30% lower on average. Two small signs of hope emerged in September. Corporate and government leaders attended the first UN Private Sector Forum on Food Sustainability and the Millennium Development Goals. At the same time, the WFP unveiled Purchase for Progress, an initiative by which governments and private foundations (notably the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation and the Howard G. Buffett Foundation) would finance WFP purchases of foodstuffs from small farmers in LDCs, which would thus encourage local food production and offer small farmers better access to world markets.

Seed Banks—Preserving Crop Diversity

by Gregory McNamee

On 26 Feb 2008, the most ambitious seed-bank facility ever constructed was inaugurated in Svalbard, a Norwegian archipelago in the Arctic Ocean only about 1,000 km (620 mi) from the North Pole. The Svalbard Global Seed Vault (SGSV), built by the Norwegian government into the side of a permafrost-covered mountain on the island of Spitsbergen, is designed to store in deep freeze the seeds of hundreds of thousands of plant varieties from crops grown on every part of the globe. This high-security "doomsday" conservancy, built far from unrest and civil war, seeks to protect the world's agricultural inheritance against disaster, be it from rising sea levels, an asteroid strike, pestilence, or even the unforeseen consequences of an excessive reliance on crops with single-source genetic modifications.

Established as a backup facility, the SGSV accepts only seed samples that are already held by other seed banks. The deposits are managed by the Global Crop Diversity Trust, an independent international organization that was established in 2004 by the UN Food and Agriculture Organization and the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research, which operates international seed banks for the most important staple food crops. Seed samples for the SGSV are delivered and stored in sealed boxes and remain the property of the country or organization that deposits them. By late 2008 about 320,000 distinct seed samples, consisting of about 220 million seeds from about 2,900 plant species in more than 200 countries, had been placed in storage. The vault's storage chambers are able to hold 4.5 million seed samples, for a total of 2.25 billion seeds.

Since the SGSV safeguards duplicate seed collections, it is not intended to replace any of the roughly 1,400 seed banks that exist worldwide and include national and international institutions, organizations focused on particular types of crops, and regional facilities. In general, these seed banks are intended to preserve the genetic variety of plants, and for this reason they are also referred to as gene banks. Conserving crop varieties and related wild species provides genetic variations that can be useful for developing new varieties with essential traits, such as tolerating new pests or climate conditions.

Among the most important global seed banks is the Millennium Seed Bank (West Sussex, England), which is managed by the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew. Opened in 2000, the Millennium Seed Bank has succeeded in preserving virtually all of Britain's 1,400 native plants and, in collaboration with seed banks in other parts of the world, seeks to conserve a total of more than 24,000 plant species.

Seed banks that specialize in particular crops include the International Rice Genebank at the International Rice Research Institute (IRRI), based in Los Baños, Philippines, and the International Potato Center (IPC), based in Lima. The IRRI, which was established in 1960, estimates that it has conserved about 100,000 varieties of rice. The IPC, which was established in 1971 and subsequently expanded to include other tubers of Andean origin, counts in its collections about 150 wild potato species.

An example of a regional seed bank is Native Seeds, which was founded in 1983 in the southwestern United States to help Native Americans locate seeds for growing traditional crops. One of the oldest crop conservancies in North America, it aims in part to make poor communities nutritionally self-sufficient. The organization's seed collectors, often traveling to isolated areas by foot or muleback, have recovered seeds for some 2,000 varieties of plants, including amaranth, once widely used for food and fiber in Mexico; tepary beans, a favorite food of the desert peoples of the Southwest; orchard, or "mountain spinach," grown in the Rio Grande uplands of New Mexico; panic grass, once a rich source of grain and protein for the Indian peoples of southern California and northern Mexico; and a sunflower grown in the Grand Canyon by the Havasupai Indians—one that is completely resistant to a rust disease that has ravaged commercial sunflower crops.

By selecting single hybrids, industrial agriculture (the source of the stock advertised in most commercial seed catalogs) has diminished the number of varieties of food plants available in the United States and other countries to all but a devoted handful of farmers and experimental gardeners. In the early 1900s, for example, more than 7,000 varieties of apples were grown commercially in the United States; today only a couple of dozen varieties are available to most consumers. The planting of monoculture crops, which increases standardization and efficiency, has replaced traditional crops in plots where they had been grown and bred for centuries. As a consequence, traditional crops, which had acquired the traits that are most suitable for the soils and climate of a given location, have been steadily lost. The preservation of this diversity of crops will help safeguard the future of the food plants upon which humans depend. Seed banks can directly address the concerns raised by a diminishment of genetic diversity among common food crops, and as plant scientists recover varieties of native food plants across the world, they add color to a sadly washed-out genetic palette.

Combating the Crisis in Darfur

by Alex Meixner

In 2008, five years after conflict broke out in the Darfur region of The Sudan, the prospect seemed dim for a political settlement to end the war that had killed as many as 300,000 people. In early 2003, soon after local rebel groups took up arms against the Khartoum-based regime of Sudanese Pres. Omar al-Bashir, long-standing tensions in Darfur erupted into what the US government later described as the first genocide of the 21st century. The rebels felt marginalized by their government, saw that other rebels in southern Sudan were likely to be granted major economic and political concessions as their own civil war against Khartoum ran down, and realized that they themselves were being left out in the literal and figurative desert with no hope of similar concessions or improved conditions. An oil-fueled economic boom was producing skyscrapers in Khartoum, while Darfur continued to exist largely without roads, hospitals, or a sufficient education system and was suffering through a brutal drought.

Following a few initial conventional battles with new rebel groups in Darfur, the Khartoum regime switched tactics and began to fight a hate-fueled counterinsurgency war in Darfur by funding, arming, and unleashing proxy militias known as Janjaweed—made up of fighters from nomadic groups who identified themselves as "Arab"—on villages whose people identified themselves as "African." This strategy depended on exploiting this self-proclaimed racial divide in Darfur, and it worked, despite the fact that both "Arab" and "African" Darfurians were predominantly Muslim, spoke Arabic, and shared the same skin tone. The result was an undisciplined paramilitary campaign that targeted men, women, and children.

In addition to the hundreds of thousands killed since the beginning of the campaign, approximately 2.5 million more were forced from their homes and into the Sahara. Horrific stories of mass rape, murder, and unspeakable atrocities became commonplace. Survivors gathered in camps for internally displaced persons throughout Darfur and in refugee camps across the border in eastern Chad and in the Central African Republic.

For its part the international community reacted to different aspects of the crisis with varying degrees of success. The biggest bright spot was the Herculean effort put forth by governmental and nongovernmental aid agencies, providing food, medicine, shelter, and basic services to the millions of Darfurians in need. More than 13,000 international and Sudanese aid workers built the world's largest humanitarian life-support system in Darfur, saving countless lives that otherwise would have been lost to starvation and disease.

Less successful were international efforts to reduce the threat of physical violence to Darfuran civilians and to achieve a lasting political solution to end the conflict. To achieve the former, the African Union (AU) in 2004 deployed a 7,400-strong peace-keeping force, the African Union Mission in The Sudan (AMIS). When AMIS went into Darfur, the rest of the international community stood by and watched; once troops had been deployed, they helped protect women from rape, but it soon became clear that AMIS lacked the manpower, equipment, funding, and mandate to truly protect civilians and help restore order to an area as large as Darfur (roughly the size of France). On 31 Aug 2006, the UN Security Council authorized the generation and deployment of a large peacekeeping force with Resolution 1706.

The Sudanese government, however, rejected Resolution 1706, effectively putting the UN between a rock and a hard place: in the entire history of the UN, no peacekeeping mission had ever failed to deploy once authorized by the Security Council. On the other hand, only one mission—the “police action” better known as the Korean War—had ever been deployed over the objection of a sovereign host government. A compromise was sought to bridge the impasse, and the result was a joint peacekeeping force known as the hybrid United Nations/African Union Mission in Darfur (UNAMID), authorized by the Security Council on 31 July 2007. While initial command and control elements of UNAMID began augmenting AMIS in the fall of 2007, UNAMID did not formally take over for AMIS and assume responsibility for peacekeeping in Darfur until 31 Dec 2007. President Bashir initially agreed in writing to accept the new force, but reports soon began to emerge of efforts by the Sudanese government to obstruct the deployment of UNAMID troops and to limit their movements in the province. Also posing an impediment to progress in the region was the fact that the majority of the proposed 26,000 UNAMID peacekeepers and police were not yet on the ground, with the force's troop and military personnel level reaching only 12,374 by the close of 2008.

Efforts to arrive at a lasting political solution have arguably fared worse. Several cease-fires were adopted, celebrated, promptly violated, and thus rendered moot. More frustrating still were the nearly 20 months of peace talks that took place in Abuja, Nigeria, culminating on 5 May 2006 in the partial signing of the Darfur Peace Agreement (DPA). The Sudanese government and only one of what were then just three rebel factions signed the agreement, and with the exception of a few initial concessions to the one rebel signer, almost none of the agreement was implemented. After the signing and subsequent collapse of the DPA, the original three rebel factions split into more than a dozen. The international community, operating through a combined UN-AU effort, regrouped, pooled their efforts, and organized new peace talks that began in Surt, Libya, on 27 Oct 2007, but these stalled after representatives of several leading rebel factions refused to participate in the talks. A similar effort in February 2009 to resume peace talks in Doha, Qatar, has thus far yielded no tangible results. Meanwhile, as the international community moved forward, albeit slowly, on fully deploying UNAMID, the violence in Darfur continued, including attacks by rebels and, in some instances, government forces on UNAMID peacekeepers, government and Janjaweed attacks on villages thought to support rebels, and interrebel fighting. As always, Darfuri civilians have been caught in the middle, with the humanitarian life-support system that sustains them growing ever more fragile and the memories of their former, peaceful lives growing ever more faint.

Chronology, July 2008—June 2009

A day-by-day listing of important and interesting events, adapted from Britannica Book of the Year. See also Disasters.

July 2008

- 1 Jul The Dow Jones Industrial Average falls 0.8%, crossing the official threshold from a bull stock market to a bear market.
- 2 Jul In a daring operation, Colombian forces rescue 15 hostages held by the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC), among them Ingrid Betancourt, a former presidential candidate kidnapped in 2002, and three American contractors seized in 2003.
- 3 Jul A yearlong celebration of the 400th anniversary of the founding of Canada's Quebec City comes to a climax.
  - ▶ The price of a barrel of oil closes at a record high of US$145.29.
- 4 Jul Shots are exchanged between Georgian troops and militia members of the country's separatist province of South Ossetia; at least two people are killed.
  - ▶ The first weekend charter flight from China carries tourists across the Taiwan Strait to Taiwan; the flights are expected to expand to carry some 3,000 travelers a day.
- 5 Jul American Venus Williams defeats her sister Serena Williams to take her fifth All-England (Wimbledon) women's tennis championship; the following day Rafael Nadal of Spain wins the men's title for the first time when he defeats five-time champion Roger Federer of Switzerland.
- 6 Jul In Mogadishu, Somalia, gunmen kill Osman Ali Ahmed, leader of the United Nations Development Programme for Somalia.
- 7 Jul In York, England, the General Synod of the Church of England votes to allow the appointment of women as bishops; though some other branches of the Anglican Communion had taken the step several years earlier, the move is controversial.
- 8 Jul The leaders of the Group of Eight industrialized countries, meeting in Japan, release a document agreeing to cut greenhouse-gas emissions in half by 2050; environmentalists complain that the agreement fails to include targets for the nearer future.
  - ▶ The US and the Czech Republic sign an accord that will allow the US to base part of its antiballistic-missile system in the Czech Republic; ratification of the accord is uncertain.
- 9 Jul The US Senate gives final approval to a bill that affirms the authority of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) court but grants the government latitude in conducting wiretaps outside the court's authority and provides legal immunity to telecommunication companies that complied with earlier wiretapping efforts.
- 10 Jul Salman Rushdie's 1981 novel Midnight's Children wins the Best of the Booker award, as decided by an online poll to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the literature prize.
- 11 Jul After the announcement of massive layoffs by IndyMac Bancorp prompts a run on the California-based bank by its customers, federal bank regulators seize the bank.
- 12 Jul American tennis player Michael Chang, the late sports marketer Mark McCormack, and Gene Scott, the late publisher of Tennis Week magazine, are inducted into the International Tennis Hall of Fame in a ceremony in Newport RI.
- 13 Jul The US Federal Reserve announces an emergency short-term loan to shore up the mortgage finance companies Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, while Pres. George W. Bush asks Congress to approve a larger rescue package.
  - ▶ In Paris the 43-member Union for the Mediterranean is inaugurated, with Pres. Nicolas Sarkozy of France serving as its first northern copresident and Pres. Hosni Mubarak of Egypt as its southern copresident; the union is intended to unify policies on the environment, transportation, immigration, and security.
- 14 Jul Luis Moreno-Ocampo, the prosecutor of the International Criminal Court, formally requests that the court issue a warrant for the arrest of Sudanese Pres. Omar Hassan al-Bashir on charges of genocide, war crimes, and crimes against humanity relating to the conflict in the Darfur region of The Sudan.
- 15 Jul US government officials reveal that William J. Burns, undersecretary of state for political affairs, will attend a meeting on Iran's nuclear program with representatives of Iran and other UN Security Council members; this will be the highest-level contact the US has had with Iran since the 1979 Iranian Revolution.
- 16 Jul Malaysian opposition leader Anwar Ibrahim is arrested on charges of sodomy; his 1998 conviction for sodomy was later overturned.
- 17 Jul Kuwait names an ambassador to Iraq for the first time since it closed its embassy in Baghdad after the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in 1990.
  - ▶ James H. Billington, the American librarian of Congress, names Kay Ryan the country's 16th poet laureate; Ryan succeeds Charles Simic.
- 18 Jul The World Trade Organization rules that China's policy of levying punishing tariffs on car-makers operating in the country unless they use locally made parts violates international trade rules.
  - ▶ The much-anticipated movie The Dark Knight, the sequel to Batman Begins, opens in theaters across the US at midnight; cinemas in some cities schedule round-the-clock showings to accommodate demand.
- 19 Jul Iran rejects an international proposal that calls for it to freeze its nuclear program and for the international community to refrain from adding new sanctions as a starting point for negotiations, leaving the talks deadlocked.
- 20 Jul In Canterbury, England, the Lambeth Conference of the Anglican Communion, held every 10 years, opens with a church service, though more than 200 of the 880 bishops and archbishops invited do not attend; many of the absentees became founding members of the dissident Fellowship of Confessing Anglicans on 29 June.
  - ▶ Padraig Harrington of Ireland wins the British Open golf tournament at the Royal Birkdale Golf Club in Southport, Lancashire, England; Harrington is the first European to have won two consecutive British Opens in over 100 years.

21 Jul Radovan Karadzic, who was indicted by the UN war crimes tribunal on 24 Jul 1995 for his part in the massacre of some 8,000 Muslims in Srebrenica, Bosnia and Herzegovina, earlier that year, is arrested in Belgrade, Serbia, where he had been living in disguise.

31 Jul NASA scientists announce that the Phoenix Mars lander has tested Martian soil and, for the first time, has proved conclusively that it contains water ice.

QUOTE OF THE MONTH

“ We've now finally touched it and tasted it. And I'd like to say, from my standpoint, it tastes very fine. ”

—William V. Boynton, designer of the Phoenix Mars lander's Thermal and Evolved Gas Analyzer, on the proof that water exists on Mars, 31 July ► Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick signs a bill that will allow same-sex couples living in states that do not permit same-sex marriage to marry in Massachusetts

August 2008

1 Aug Georgian troops enter the separatist province of South Ossetia, and six people die in the fighting between the soldiers and the rebel militia.

2 Aug Bookstores throughout the US hold midnight parties as the fourth novel of the popular Twilight vampire series by Stephenie Meyer, Breaking Dawn, goes on sale.

3 Aug At the conclusion of the Lambeth Conference in Canterbury, England, Anglican Archbishop Rowan Williams announces an agreement to negotiate a new covenant between the member churches; in the meantime, liberal members are enjoined to refrain from ordaining gay clergy and blessing same-sex unions, and conservative members are asked not to leave their churches.

► South Korean golfer Shin Ji Yai captures the Women's British Open golf tournament; at age 20 years 3 months 6 days, she is the youngest to have won the title.

4 Aug Chinese state media report that two Uighur separatists rammed a truck into a brigade of border-patrol officers outside their barracks in Kashgar, Xinjiang state, and then attacked the officers with knives and several bombs, killing at least 16 of them.

5 Aug The US Government Accountability Office reveals that Iraq has a budget surplus of some US$79 billion, very little of which is being used in the rebuilding of the country's infrastructure; those costs are largely financed by the US.

► The Wildlife Conservation Society reports to the International Primatological Society Congress in Edinburgh its discovery of some 125,000 western lowland gorillas in the northern area of the Republic of the Congo; the gorillas are coming under increasing pressure in most parts of the world.

6 Aug The US mortgage finance giant Freddie Mac posts figures for the second quarter that reflect a much deeper loss than had been expected, as does the large insurer American International Group (AIG).

7 Aug Georgian troops take control of several villages in the separatist province of South Ossetia; some 10 people die in the fighting.

8 Aug Russian troops join the battle in Georgia's separatist province of South Ossetia, fighting against Georgia; also, a Russian air strike hits the Georgian port of Poti.

► A spectacular opening ceremony featuring some 15,000 performers directed by filmmaker Zhang

Yimou marks the start of the Olympic Games in Beijing.

QUOTE OF THE MONTH

“ War has started. ”

—Russian Prime Minister Vladimir Putin on Russia's invasion of Georgia in support of South Ossetia, 8 August

- 9 Aug Russian troops enter the separatist province of Abkhazia in Georgia as they continue to pour into South Ossetia and to drop bombs on other parts of Georgia; Georgian Pres. Mikheil Saakashvili asks the outside world for help.
- 10 Aug At the Oakland Hills Country Club in Bloomfield Hills MI, Padraig Harrington of Ireland defeats Sergio Garcia of Spain and American Ben Curtis by two strokes to become the first European since 1930 to win the Professional Golfers' Association of America championship.
- 11 Aug Philippine officials say that some 130,000 people have fled the violence in North Cotabato province on the island of Mindanao since a Supreme Court ruling halting the signing of an agreement between the Philippine government and the Moro Islamic Liberation Front caused an outbreak of fighting between rebel and government forces.
- 12 Aug A Taliban attack on a minibus carrying Pakistani soldiers leaves at least 13 of the troops dead; the soldiers are part of Pakistan's strong military response to Taliban aggressiveness in Bajaur in the Tribal Areas.
- 13 Aug Lebanon and Syria announce that they will, for the first time since independence, establish diplomatic relations, but the news is overshadowed by a bomb explosion that destroys a bus in Tripoli, Lebanon, killing 15 people.
- 14 Aug The US reaches an agreement with Poland that will allow placement of an American missile-defense base in the European country.
- Nigeria officially cedes the potentially oil-rich Bakassi Peninsula to Cameroon in compliance with a 2002 ruling by the International Court of Justice.
- 15 Aug Prachanda, leader of the former Maoist insurgency, is elected prime minister of Nepal.
- The journal Science publishes a study describing the rapid growth of marine dead zones, areas starved of oxygen because of nitrogen from fertilizer runoff in oceanic coastal areas; such zones, frequently in fishing grounds, have doubled every decade since the 1960s.
- 16 Aug Russian Pres. Dmitry Medvedev signs a revised cease-fire agreement with Georgia, but Russian troops continue operations in Georgia.
- 17 Aug Iran reports that it has successfully test-fired a rocket that could place a satellite in orbit.
- At the Olympics in Beijing, American swimmer Michael Phelps wins a record eighth gold medal, surpassing the previous record for a single Olympiad of seven gold medals won by Mark Spitz in 1972; Phelps has also set four individual world records and one Olympic record and participated in three relays that set world records.
- 18 Aug Pres. Pervez Musharraf of Pakistan announces his resignation in a nationally televised speech.
- The government of Peru declares a state of emergency in response to 10 days of occupation of oil facilities and a hydroelectric plant in the Amazon basin by indigenous people fighting development.
- 19 Aug In Isser, Algeria, a suicide car bomber kills at least 48 people, many of whom had been waiting in line to take an examination at a police academy.
- 20 Aug Algeria endures its second bombing in as many days as two bombs go off in Bouira, one of which damages a military compound and the other of which kills at least 12 people on a bus transporting construction workers.
- Jamaican sprinter Usain Bolt runs the men's 200-m race in 19.30 sec at the Olympics, breaking the world record by an astonishing two-hundredths of a second.
- 21 Aug In Wah, Pakistan, outside Pakistan's largest weapons-manufacturing compound, two suicide bombers kill at least 64 people; two days earlier a suicide attack in a hospital emergency room in Dera Ismail Khan left 32 people dead.
- 22 Aug Aerial bombing in Afghanistan's Herat province by US-led coalition forces after a battle against Taliban insurgents is reported by Afghanistan to have killed 76 civilians, though the coalition forces say that 30 militants were killed; the next day the civilian death toll is raised to 95.
- 23 Aug South Korea defeats Cuba 3–2 in a stunning upset to win the gold medal in baseball at the Olympic Games in Beijing.
- 24 Aug Pres. Nicolas Sarkozy of France calls an emergency meeting of the European Union to address relations with Russia and support for Georgia in light of the fact that Russia has failed to comply with the terms of the cease-fire agreement.
- The Waipio team from Waipahu, Hawaii, defeats the Matamoros team from Mexico 12–3 to win baseball's 62nd Little League World Series.
- 25 Aug A government attack on Kalma, a large camp housing some 90,000 internal refugees in the Darfur region of The Sudan, kills dozens of people.
- 26 Aug Russia officially recognizes the independence of the Georgian provinces of South Ossetia and Abkhazia.
- North Korea announces that it has ceased disabling its main nuclear complex at Yongbyon because it has not been removed from a US terrorism blacklist.
- 27 Aug Democratic Party delegates, meeting at their national convention in Denver, nominate Barack Obama, senator from Illinois, and Joe Biden, senator from Delaware, as the party's candidates for president and vice president, respectively.
- 28 Aug Iraq signs an agreement with the China National Petroleum Corp. for the development of the Ahdab oil field.
- 29 Aug Georgia and Russia mutually sever diplomatic relations.
- The state-owned airline Alitalia files for bankruptcy protection in Italy.
- 30 Aug Italy signs an agreement with Libya to provide US$5 billion in aid and projects as compensation for Italy's 1911–42 occupation of Libya; in return, Libya is to take steps to prevent illegal immigration to Italy from Libya.
- 31 Aug As the intermittently strengthening Hurricane Gustav, having caused destruction in Haiti, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, and Cuba, heads toward the Gulf Coast in the US, some two million people in Texas, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Alabama evacuate.

September 2008

- 1 Sep US and Iraqi military officials announce that responsibility for paying and commanding Sunni Awakening Councils in Baghdad and the surrounding area will be taken over by Iraq's government beginning next month, and the US military formally hands over control of once-violent Anbar province to Iraqi armed forces.
- 2 Sep The US Library of Congress announces that Stevie Wonder is the winner of the Gershwin Prize for Popular Song and that in conjunction with the prize it has commissioned a song from him; the prize will be presented in February 2009.
- 3 Sep At the Republican National Convention in St. Paul, MN, Sen. John McCain of Arizona and Gov. Sarah Palin of Alaska are nominated as the party's candidates for president and vice president, respectively, in the upcoming election in November.
- 4 Sep The journal Nature publishes a study suggesting that the most powerful hurricanes and typhoons, particularly in the Atlantic and Indian oceans, have become stronger over the past 25 years.
- 5 Sep US Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice meets with Libyan leader Muammar al-Qaddafi in his compound in Tripoli; it is the first visit to the country by a current US secretary of state in more than 50 years.
  - ▶ The US National Snow and Ice Center reports that for the first time since recordings began being taken in the area, both the Northwest Passage above North America and the Northern Sea Route over Europe and Asia were open during the summer, providing a ring of navigable waters in the Arctic.
  - ▶ The Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield, MA inducts as members National Basketball Association players Adrian Dantley, Patrick Ewing, and Hakeem Olajuwon and coach Pat Riley, women's college coach Cathy Rush, and broadcaster Dick Vitale.
- 6 Sep Pakistan's two legislative houses and four provincial assemblies elect Asif Ali Zardari president of the country.
  - ▶ Turkish Pres. Abdullah Gul attends an association football (soccer) match in Armenia after an invitation by Armenian Pres. Serzh Sarkisyan; he is the first Turkish head of state to visit the country.
- 7 Sep The US government takes over the mortgage finance companies Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac in a rescue package that will all but wipe out their shareholders' stake but will guarantee the corporate debt.
  - ▶ Serena Williams of the US defeats Jelena Jankovic of Serbia to win the women's US Open tennis championship; the following day Roger Federer of Switzerland defeats Andy Murray of Scotland to win the men's title for the fifth straight year.

Michael (Joseph) Jackson (29 Aug 1958, Gary IN—25 Jun 2009, Los Angeles CA), American singer, songwriter, and dancer who was the most popular entertainer in the world in the 1980s. Jackson began his lifelong performance career as the youngest and most talented of five brothers known as the Jackson 5, who sported the loudest fashions, the largest Afros, the snappiest choreography, and a youthful, soulful exuberance, and who scored (1969–70) four consecutive number one pop hits for Motown Records: "I Want You Back," "ABC," "The Love You Save," and "I'll Be There." Michael's solo effort Off the Wall (1979) became the best-selling album of the year and yielded the international hit singles "Don't Stop 'til You Get Enough" and "Rock with You." Three years later he returned with Thriller, a tour de force that elevated him to a worldwide superstar; it captured a record-setting eight Grammys, remained on the charts for more than two years, and sold more than 40 million copies worldwide, long holding the distinction of being the best-selling album in history. The album's second single, "Billie Jean," an electrifying dance track and the vehicle for Jackson's trademark "moonwalk" dance, topped the pop charts, as did "Beat It," which featured a raucous solo from famed guitarist Eddie Van Halen, while the electrifying 14-minute "Thriller" video (1983) became a cultural icon and set a new standard for production values in the genre. In 1997 the Jackson 5 was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, with Michael following in 2001. Despite his professional success, Jackson's eccentric, secluded lifestyle grew increasingly controversial in later years, clouded by allegations of child molestation in 1993, an arrest on child molestation charges in 2003, and finally, a financial collapse that nearly resulted in the loss of his lavish Neverland ranch.

Sims*, in which the US Supreme Court required the Alabama state legislature to create voting districts that were equitably apportioned, which was credited with helping to establish the legal doctrine of "one person, one vote" and curtailing voting discrimination in the South; he was the American Civil Liberties Union's Southern director (1964–72) and director of its legislative office (1972–77).

John (Clifford) Mortimer (21 Apr 1923, London, England—16 Jan 2009, near Henley-on-Thames, Oxfordshire, England), British barrister and writer who wrote plays for the stage, television, radio, and motion pictures; he was best known, however, as the creator of the crusty old British barrister Horace Rumpole, whom he featured in numerous stories and on the long-running (1978–92) TV series Rumpole of the Bailey; he was knighted in 1998.

Robert (Patrick) Mulligan (23 Aug 1925, Bronx NY—20 Dec 2008, Lyme CT), American film and TV director who earned an Emmy Award for his direction of the TV film The Moon and the Sixpence (1959), but who achieved his greatest renown for directing movies that involved complex human relationships, notably To Kill a Mockingbird (1962).

Tharon (Myrene) Musser (8 Jan 1925, Roanoke VA—19 Apr 2009, Newtown CT), American lighting designer who illuminated the sets of at least 150 Broadway productions and won Tony Awards for Follies (1972), A Chorus Line (1976), and Dreamgirls (1982).

Levy Patrick Mwanawasa (3 Sep 1948, Mufulira, Northern Rhodesia [now Zambia]—19 Aug 2008, Paris, France), Zambian attorney and politician who, as the third president (2002–08) of Zambia, launched an anticorruption campaign that included stripping his predecessor, Frederick Chiluba, of immunity from prosecution and distinguished himself as one of the few African leaders to publicly criticize Zimbabwean Pres. Robert Mugabe.

Ibrahim Nasir (2 Sep 1926, Male, British Maldives—22 Nov 2008, Singapore), Maldivian politician who dominated life in the Indian Ocean archipelago for more than 20 years; under his control, Maldives was transformed into a modern country.

Peter (Francis) Newell (31 Aug 1915, Vancouver, BC, Canada—17 Nov 2008, Rancho Santa Fe CA), Canadian-born American basketball coach who served as the influential coach of the basketball teams at the University of San Francisco (1946–50), where his 1949 team captured the National Invitation Tournament (NIT) title, and the University of California, Berkeley (1954–60), where he guided his team to triumph in the 1959 NCAA tournament; in 1960 he led the US basketball team to a gold medal in the 1960 Rome Olympic Games; he was inducted into the Basketball Hall of Fame in 1979.

Paul (Leonard) Newman (26 Jan 1925, Cleveland OH—26 Sep 2008, Westport CT), American actor, a matinee idol whose striking good looks and startling blue eyes became hallmarks in a film career in which he was honored for his compelling performances with nine Academy Award nominations and one win; he also won two honorary Oscars, a lifetime achievement (1986) and the Jean Hersholt Humanitarian Award (1994). Newman honed his craft at New York City's Actors Studio, and his impressive portrayal of boxer Rocky Graziano in Somebody Up There Likes Me (1956) was followed by Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (1958); for which he received his first Academy Award nomination), The Long, Hot Summer (1958), and The Young Philadelphians (1959). Newman essayed the role that perhaps best defined his screen persona, that of pool shark "Fast" Eddie Felson in The Hustler (1961), and earned another Oscar nomination; Hud (1963) and Cool Hand Luke (1967) further solidified his image as an ingratiating iconoclast. Newman costarred in 11 films with his second wife, actress Joanne Woodward, and directed her in several others. Two enormously popular comedies teamed Newman with costar Robert Redford: the western Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid (1969) and the Depression-era film The Sting (1973), which won the Academy Award for best picture. Newman maintained his star status with such popular films as The Towering Inferno (1974), Slap Shot (1977), Fort Apache the Bronx (1981), Absence of Malice (1981), and The Verdict (1982). He finally won an Academy Award for his reprise as Felson in The Color of Money (1986). In 2005 he starred in the television movie Empire Falls, for which he won Emmy, Golden Globe, and Screen Actors Guild awards. In addition to his Hollywood career, Newman launched (1982) the successful Newman's Own line of food products; its profits benefited a number of charitable causes, and in 1988 he founded the Hole in the Wall Gang Camp in south-central Connecticut for children with serious medical conditions.

Gaafar Mohamed el-Nimeiri (Ja'far Muhammad al-Numayri, or Nimeiry; 1 Jan 1930, Wad Nubawi, Omdurman, Sudan—30 May 2009, Omdurman, Sudan), Sudanese military leader and politician who governed The Sudan from 1969 until he was ousted in a bloodless coup in 1985; Nimeiri was credited with the negotiations that led to a settlement of a 10-year conflict in the southern Sudan region, to which he granted autonomy in 1972, but his attempts to promulgate measures of Shari'ah (Islamic law) in The Sudan alienated many in the predominantly Christian southern region.

Thubten Jigme Norbu (Tashi Tsering; Taktser Rinpoche; 16 Aug 1922, Takster, Amdo, Tibet [now in China]—5 Sep 2008, Bloomington IN), Tibetan religious leader, scholar, and activist who was identified as the reincarnation of the Tibetan lama Taktser Rinpoche at age three, 10 years before the birth of his brother, the future 14th Dalai Lama; Norbu, who disagreed with his brother's belief in peaceful resistance to Chinese rule in Tibet, worked as a CIA translator and endorsed guerrilla warfare for Tibetan independence.

David Foster Wallace (21 Feb 1961, Ithaca NY—found dead 12 Sep 2008, Claremont CA), American novelist, short-story writer, and essayist who produced dense works that provide a dark, often satiric analysis of American culture; his debut novel, The Broom of the System (1987), was highly regarded, but he became best known for his second novel, Infinite Jest (1996), a massive, multilayered novel that features a sweeping cast of post-modern characters and calendar years that have been named by companies that purchased the rights to promote their products.

Gordon (Trueman Riviere) Waller (4 Jun 1945, Baer-mar, Aberdeenshire, Scotland—17 Jul 2009, Norwich CT), British singer who was the lower-voiced member of the pop-singing duo Peter and Gordon; between 1964 and 1968, Waller and his singing partner, Peter Asher, racked up eight top 20 hit records.

Thomas H(uckle) Weller (15 Jun 1915, Ann Arbor MI—23 Aug 2008, Needham MA), American physician and virologist who was in 1954 the corecipient (with John Enders and Frederick Robbins) of the Nobel Prize for Physiology or Medicine for the successful cultivation of poliomyelitis virus in tissue cultures, which led to the development of polio vaccines.

Donald E(dwin) Westlake (12 Jul 1933, New York NY—31 Dec 2008, San Tancho, Mexico), American writer who attracted a wide readership as well as great critical acclaim with his stylish crime novels; he won three Edgar Allan Poe Awards from the Mystery Writers of America before being bestowed the title Grand Master—its highest honor—in 1993.

Jerry Wexler (10 Jan 1917, New York NY—15 Aug 2008, Sarasota FL), American record producer and music journalist who coined the phrase “rhythm and blues” in 1949; as an executive for Atlantic Records he guided the careers of such classic performers as Ray Charles, Wilson Pickett, Aretha Franklin, and the British group Led Zeppelin, and he was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1987.

James Whitmore (1 Oct 1921, White Plains NY—6 Feb 2009, Malibu CA), American actor who won critical acclaim for his live one-man shows during the 1970s; he famously portrayed Will Rogers, Harry Truman, and Theodore Roosevelt; Whitmore won (2000) an Emmy Award as outstanding guest actor in a drama series for the TV series The Practice and earned a Tony Award as best newcomer for his performance in the Broadway production Command Decision (1947).

Dingiri Banda Wijetunga (15 Feb 1916, Polgahanga, Ceylon [now Sri Lanka]—21 Sep 2008, Kandy, Sri Lanka), Sri Lankan politician who brought stability to Sri Lanka as the country's head of state (1993–94) during the crucial period immediately following the assassination on 1 May 1993 of Pres. Ranasinghe Premadasa.

the Rev. Abraham (Lincoln) Woods (Jr.) (7 Oct 1928, Birmingham AL—7 Nov 2008, Birmingham AL), American pastor and civil rights activist who led the protesters who staged (1963) the first sit-ins at a whites-only lunch counter in downtown Birmingham, a landmark event in the fight for civil rights; Woods was jailed along with the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. (a friend from his Morehouse College days); Woods was also on the scene on 15 Sep 1963, when a dynamite blast claimed the lives of four black girls at the 16th Street Baptist Church, and he was instrumental years later in fighting for a reinvestigation of the bombing.

Rick Wright (Richard William Wright; 28 Jul 1943, Pinner, Middlesex, England—15 Sep 2008, London, England), British singer-songwriter and keyboardist who was a founding member of the rock group Pink Floyd; his atmospheric keyboard work became a central feature of the group's psychedelic sound; he composed songs for several of the group's acclaimed albums, notably The Dark Side of the Moon (1973) and Wish You Were Here (1975).

Andrew (Newell) Wyeth (12 Jul 1917, Chadds Ford PA—16 Jan 2009, Chadds Ford PA), American watercolorist who was noted primarily for his realistic depictions of the buildings, fields, hills, and people of his personal world, almost entirely from two localities, the Brandywine Valley around Chadds Ford and the area near his summer home in Cushing ME; he was the first painter to receive the Presidential Freedom Award (1963), the first American artist since John Singer Sargent to be elected to the French Académie des Beaux-Arts (1977), the first living American artist to be elected to Britain's Royal Academy (1980), and the first artist to be awarded the US Congressional Gold Medal (1990), and in 2007 he was a recipient of the National Medal of the Arts.

Xiao Ke (14 Jul 1907, Jiache county, Hunan province, China—24 Oct 2008, Beijing, China), Chinese military official and writer who was the last surviving military leader of the Long March (1934–36), the epic 10,000-km (6,000-mi) trek of the Chinese communists into northwestern China; he later became known for his opposition to the use of troops to suppress the pro-democracy demonstrations in Tiananmen Square in 1989—a position he refused to retract despite political pressure to do so.

Jerry Yang (Yang Xiangzhong; 31 Jul 1959, Weixian, Hebei province, China—5 Feb 2009, Boston MA), Chinese-born American reproductive biologist who, as a pioneer in cloning research, in 1999 succeeded in producing the first cloned farm animal in the US—a Holstein calf named Amy.

(Sandra) Kay Yow (14 Mar 1942, Gibsonville NC—24 Jan 2009, Cary NC), American basketball coach who served (1975–2009) as the head coach at North Carolina State University and became one of the winningest coaches in NCAA Division I history; she tallied a career coaching record of 737–344 over 38 seasons on the collegiate level and, at the time of her death, was one of only six Division I women's basketball coaches to have won at least 700 games; in addition to leading North Carolina State to 20 appearances in the NCAA tournament, she was the head coach of the US women's team that captured a gold medal at the 1988 Olympic Games in Seoul, and she was inducted into the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame in 2002.

TIME's Top 100 Films

There's nothing like a list to stimulate a strong discussion, so in the hopes of striking a few sparks among movie lovers, TIME asked its long-time film critics Richard Corliss and Richard Schickel to compile a list of the 100 greatest films ever made. Of course, the discussions that followed between the two critics were entirely civil at all times. Below, the films and the year they were released.

A-C

Aguirre: The Wrath of God (1972)
The Apu Trilogy (1955, 1956, 1959)
The Awful Truth (1937)
Baby Face (1933)
Bande à part (1964)
Barry Lyndon (1975)
Berlin Alexanderplatz (1980)
Blade Runner (1982)
Bonnie and Clyde (1967)
Brazil (1985)
Bride of Frankenstein (1935)
Camille (1936)
Casablanca (1942)
Charade (1963)
Children of Paradise (1945)
Chinatown (1974)
Chungking Express (1994)
Citizen Kane (1941)
City Lights (1931)
City of God (2002)
Closely Watched Trains (1966)
The Crime of Monsieur Lange (1936)
The Crowd (1928)

D-F

Day for Night (1973)
The Decalogue (1989)
Detour (1945)
The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie (1972)
Dodsworth (1936)
Double Indemnity (1944)
Dr. Strangelove or: How I Learned To Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb (1964)
Drunken Master II (1994)
E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial (1982)
8 1/2 (1963)
The 400 Blows (1959)
Farewell My Concubine (1993)
Finding Nemo (2003)
The Fly (1986)

G-J

The Godfather, Parts I and II (1972, 1974)
The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly (1966)
Goodfellas (1990)
A Hard Day's Night (1964)
His Girl Friday (1940)
Ikiru (1952)
In a Lonely Place (1950)
Invasion of the Body Snatchers (1956)
It's a Gift (1934)
It's a Wonderful Life (1946)

K-M

Kandahar (2001)
Kind Hearts and Coronets (1949)
King Kong (1933)
The Lady Eve (1941)
The Last Command (1928)
Lawrence of Arabia (1962)
Léolo (1992)
The Lord of the Rings (2001, 2002, 2003)
The Man with a Camera (1929)
The Manchurian Candidate (1962)
Meet Me in St. Louis (1944)
Metropolis (1927)
Miller's Crossing (1990)
Mon oncle d'Amérique (1980)
Mouchette (1967)

N-P

Nayakan (1987)
Ninotchka (1939)
Notorious (1946)
Olympia, Parts 1 and 2 (1938)
On the Waterfront (1954)
Once upon a Time in the West (1968)
Out of the Past (1947)
Persona (1966)
Pinocchio (1940)
Psycho (1960)
Pulp Fiction (1994)
The Purple Rose of Cairo (1985)
Pyaasa (1957)

Q-S

Raging Bull (1980)
Schindler's List (1993)
The Searchers (1956)
Sherlock, Jr. (1924)
The Shop Around the Corner (1940)
Singin' in the Rain (1952)
The Singing Detective (1986)
Smiles of a Summer Night (1955)
Some Like It Hot (1959)
Star Wars (1977)
A Streetcar Named Desire (1951)
Sunrise (1927)
Sweet Smell of Success (1957)
Swing Time (1936)

T-Z

Talk to Her (2002)
Taxi Driver (1976)
Tokyo Story (1953)
A Touch of Zen (1971)
Ugetsu (1953)
Ulysses' Gaze (1995)
Umberto D (1952)
Unforgiven (1992)
White Heat (1949)
Wings of Desire (1987)
Yojimbo (1961)

TIME's Person of the Year, 1927–2008

Every year since 1927, TIME has named a Person of the Year, identifying the individual who has done the most to affect the news in the past twelve months. The designation is often mistaken for an honor, but the magazine has always pointed out that inclusion on the list is not a recognition of good works (like the Nobel Peace prize, for example), but rather a reflection of the sheer power of one's actions, whether for good or for ill. Hence, both Adolf Hitler and Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini were chosen Person of the Year at the time when their actions commanded the attention of the world. Below, the complete list of Persons of the Year.

1927	Charles Lindbergh	1968	Apollo 8 astronauts Frank Borman, Jim Lovell, and William Anders
1928	Walter Chrysler	1969	The Middle Americans (representing the American electorate's turn to the right)
1929	Owen Young	1970	Willy Brandt
1930	Mahatma Gandhi	1971	Richard Nixon
1931	Pierre Laval	1972	Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger
1932	Franklin Delano Roosevelt	1973	John Sirica
1933	Hugh Johnson	1974	King Faisal
1934	Franklin Delano Roosevelt	1975	American Women (represented by Betty Ford, Carla Hills, Ella Grasso, Barbara Jordan, Susie Sharp, Jill Conway, Billie Jean King, Susan Brownmiller, Addie Wyatt, Kathleen Byerly, Carol Sutton, and Alison Cheek)
1935	Haile Selassie	1976	Jimmy Carter
1936	Wallis Simpson	1977	Anwar el-Sadat
1937	Chiang Kai-Shek and Soong Meiling	1978	Deng Xiaoping
1938	Adolf Hitler	1979	Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini
1939	Joseph Stalin	1980	Ronald Reagan
1940	Winston Churchill	1981	Lech Walensa
1941	Franklin Delano Roosevelt	1982	The Computer (first non-human abstract chosen; termed "Machine of the Year")
1942	Joseph Stalin	1983	Ronald Reagan and Yuri Andropov
1943	George Marshall	1984	Peter Ueberroth
1944	Dwight Eisenhower	1985	Deng Xiaoping
1945	Harry Truman	1986	Corazon Aquino
1946	James F. Byrnes	1987	Mikhail Gorbachev
1947	George Marshall	1988	Endangered Earth (“Planet of the Year”)
1948	Harry Truman	1989	Mikhail Gorbachev (“Man of the Decade”)
1949	Winston Churchill	1990	George H.W. Bush
1950	The American Fighting-Man (representing US troops fighting in the Korean War; first abstract chosen)	1991	Ted Turner
1951	Mohammed Mossadegh	1992	Bill Clinton
1952	Queen Elizabeth II	1993	The Peacemakers (represented by Nelson Mandela and F.W. de Klerk of South Africa and Yasir Arafat and Yitzhak Rabin of the Middle East)
1953	Konrad Adenauer	1994	Pope John Paul II
1954	John Foster Dulles	1995	Newt Gingrich
1955	Harlow Curtice	1996	David Ho
1956	Hungarian Freedom Fighter (representing the citizens' uprising against Soviet domination)	1997	Andy Grove
1957	Nikita Khrushchev	1998	Bill Clinton and Kenneth Starr
1958	Charles De Gaulle	1999	Jeffrey P. Bezos
1959	Dwight Eisenhower	2000	George W. Bush
1960	US Scientists (represented by Linus Pauling, Isidor Rabi, Edward Teller, Joshua Lederberg, Donald A. Glaser, Willard Libby, Robert Woodward, Charles Draper, William Shockley, Emilio Segrè, John Enders, Charles Townes, George Beadle, James Van Allen, and Edward Purcell)	2001	Rudolph Giuliani
1961	John F. Kennedy	2002	The Whistleblowers (represented by Cynthia Cooper of Worldcom, Sherron Watkins of Enron, and Coleen Rowley of the FBI)
1962	Pope John XXIII	2003	The American Soldier (representing US troops fighting in Iraq and Afghanistan)
1963	Martin Luther King, Jr.	2004	George W. Bush
1964	Lyndon Johnson	2005	The Good Samaritans (represented by Bono [Paul Hewson], Bill Gates, and Melinda Gates)
1965	William Westmoreland	2006	You (representing the new age of user-generated Internet content)
1966	The Generation Twenty-Five and Under (representing American youth)	2007	Vladimir Putin
1967	Lyndon Johnson	2008	Barack Obama

Nobel Prizes

The Alfred B. Nobel Prizes are widely regarded as the world's most prestigious awards given for intellectual achievement. They are awarded annually from a fund bequeathed for that purpose by the Swedish inventor and industrialist Alfred Bernhard Nobel and administered by the Nobel Foundation. Nobel's 1895 will established five of the six prizes: those for physics, chemistry, literature, physiology or medicine, and peace. The prize for economic sciences was added in 1969. Each year thousands of invitations are sent out to members of scholarly academies, scientists, university professors, previous Nobel laureates, members of parliaments and other assemblies, and others, requesting nominations for the various prizes. The country given is the citizenship of the recipient at the time that the award was made. Prizes may be withheld or not awarded in years when no worthy recipient can be found or when the world situation (e.g., World Wars I and II) prevents the gathering of information needed to reach a decision. Prizes are announced in mid-October and awarded in December in Stockholm and Oslo. A cash award of SEK 10 million (about US$1,323,000), a personal diploma, and a commemorative medal are given for each prize category.

YEAR	WINNER(S)	COUNTRY	ACHIEVEMENT
1901	Wilhelm Conrad Röntgen	Germany	discovery of X-rays
1902	Hendrik Antoon Lorentz Pieter Zeeman	Neth. Neth.	} investigation of the influence of magnetism on radiation
1903	Henri Becquerel Marie Curie Pierre Curie	France France France	} discovery of spontaneous radioactivity investigations of radiation phenomena discovered by Becquerel
1904	John William Strutt, 3rd Baron Rayleigh (of Terling Place)	UK	discovery of argon
1905	Philipp Lenard	Germany	research on cathode rays
1906	J.J. Thomson	UK	research into the electrical conductivity of gases
1907	A.A. Michelson	US	spectroscopic and metrological investigations
1908	Gabriel Lippmann	France	photographic reproduction of colors
1909	Ferdinand Braun Guglielmo Marconi	Germany Italy	} development of wireless telegraphy
1910	Johannes Diederik van der Waals	Neth.	research concerning the equation of state of gases and liquids
1911	Wilhelm Wien	Germany	discoveries regarding laws governing heat radiation
1912	Nils Dalén	Sweden	invention of automatic regulators for lighting coastal beacons and light buoys
1913	Heike Kamerlingh Onnes	Neth.	investigation into the properties of matter at low temperatures; production of liquid helium
1914	Max von Laue	Germany	discovery of diffraction of X-rays by crystals
1915	Lawrence Bragg William Bragg	UK UK	} analysis of crystal structure by means of X-rays
1917	Charles Glover Barkla	UK	discovery of the characteristic X-radiation of elements
1918	Max Planck	Germany	discovery of the elemental quanta
1919	Johannes Stark	Germany	discovery of the Doppler effect in positive ion rays and the division of spectral lines in the electric field
1920	Charles Édouard Guillaume	Switz.	discovery of anomalies in alloys
1921	Albert Einstein	Switz.	work in theoretical physics
1922	Niels Bohr	Denmark	investigation of atomic structure and radiation
1923	Robert Andrews Millikan	US	work on the elementary charge of electricity and on the photoelectric effect
1924	Karl Manne Georg Siegbahn	Sweden	work in X-ray spectroscopy
1925	James Franck Gustav Hertz	Germany Germany	} discovery of the laws governing the impact of an electron upon an atom
1926	Jean Perrin	France	work on the discontinuous structure of matter
1927	Arthur Holly Compton C.T.R. Wilson	US UK	discovery of the wavelength change in diffused X-rays method of making visible the paths of electrically charged particles
1928	Owen Willans Richardson	UK	work on electron emission by hot metals

Physics (continued)

YEAR	WINNER(S)	COUNTRY	ACHIEVEMENT
1930	Chandrasekhara Venkata Raman	India	work on light diffusion; discovery of Raman effect, light wavelength variation that occurs when a light beam is deflected by molecules
1932	Werner Heisenberg	Germany	creation of quantum mechanics
1933	P.A.M. Dirac	UK	} introduction of wave equations in quantum mechanics
	Erwin Schrödinger	Austria
1935	James Chadwick	UK	discovery of the neutron
1936	Carl David Anderson	US	discovery of the positron
	Victor Francis Hess	Austria	discovery of cosmic radiation
1937	Clinton Joseph Davisson	US	} experimental demonstration of the interference phenomenon in crystals irradiated by electrons
	George Paget Thomson	UK
1938	Enrico Fermi	Italy	disclosure of artificial radioactive elements produced by neutron irradiation
1939	Ernest Orlando Lawrence	US	invention of the cyclotron
1943	Otto Stern	US	discovery of the magnetic moment of the proton
1944	Isidor Isaac Rabi	US	resonance method for the registration of various properties of atomic nuclei
1945	Wolfgang Pauli	Austria	discovery of the exclusion principle of electrons
1946	Percy Williams Bridgman	US	discoveries in the domain of high-pressure physics
1947	Edward V. Appleton	UK	discovery of the Appleton layer in the upper atmosphere
1948	Patrick M.S. Blackett	UK	discoveries in the domain of nuclear physics and cosmic radiation
1949	Hideki Yukawa	Japan	prediction of the existence of mesons
1950	Cecil Frank Powell	UK	photographic method of studying nuclear processes; discoveries concerning mesons
1951	John D. Cockcroft	UK	} work on the transmutation of atomic nuclei by accelerated particles
	Ernest T.S. Walton	Ireland
1952	Felix Bloch	US	} discovery of nuclear magnetic resonance in solids
	E.M. Purcell	US
1953	Frits Zernike	Neth.	method of phase-contrast microscopy
1954	Max Born	UK	statistical studies of atomic wave functions
	Walther Bothe	W.Ger.	invention of the coincidence method
1955	Polykarp Kusch	US	measurement of the magnetic moment of the electron
	Willis Eugene Lamb, Jr.	US	discoveries in the hydrogen spectrum
1956	John Bardeen	US	} investigations on semiconductors and the invention of the transistor
	Walter H. Brattain	US
	William B. Shockley	US
1957	Tsung-Dao Lee	China	} discovery of violations of the principle of parity, the symmetry between phenomena in coordinate systems
	Chen Ning Yang	China
1958	Pavel Alexeyevich Cherenkov	USSR	} discovery and interpretation of the Cherenkov effect, which indicates that electrons emit light as they pass through a transparent medium at a speed higher than the speed of light in that medium
	Ilya Mikhaylovich Frank	USSR
	Igor Yevgenyevich Tamm	USSR
1959	Owen Chamberlain	US	} confirmation of the existence of the antiproton
	Emilio Segrè	US
1960	Donald A. Glaser	US	development of the bubble chamber
1961	Robert Hofstadter	US	determination of the shape and size of atomic nucleons
	Rudolf Ludwig Mössbauer	W.Ger.	discovery of the Mössbauer effect, a nuclear process permitting the resonance absorption of gamma rays
1962	Lev Davidovich Landau	USSR	contributions to the understanding of condensed states of matter
1963	J. Hans D. Jensen	W.Ger.	} development of the shell model theory of the structure of the atomic nuclei principles governing the interaction of protons and neutrons in the nucleus
	Maria Goeppert Mayer	US
	Eugene Paul Wigner	US
1964	Nikolay G. Basov	USSR	} work in quantum electronics leading to the construction of instruments based on maser-laser principles
	Aleksandr M. Prokhorov	USSR
	Charles Hard Townes	US	} work in quantum electrodynamics, which describes mathematically all interactions of light with matter and of charged particles with one another
1965	Richard P. Feynman	US
	Julian Seymour Schwinger	US
	Shin'ichiro Tomonaga	Japan	} discovery of optical methods for studying Hertzian resonances in atoms
1966	Alfred Kastler	France
1967	Hans Albrecht Bethe	US	discoveries concerning the energy production of stars
1968	Luis W. Alvarez	US	work with elementary particles, in particular the discovery of resonance states
1969	Murray Gell-Mann	US	classification of elementary particles and their interactions

Physics (continued)

YEAR	WINNER(S)	COUNTRY	ACHIEVEMENT
1970	Hannes Alfvén	Sweden	} work in magnetohydrodynamics and in antiferromagnetism and ferrimagnetism
	Louis-Eugène-Félix Néel	France
1971	Dennis Gabor	UK	} invention of holography
1972	John Bardeen	US	} development of the theory of superconductivity, the disappearance of electrical resistance in various solids when they are cooled below certain temperatures
	Leon N. Cooper	US
	John Robert Schrieffer	US
1973	Leo Esaki	Japan	} experimental discoveries in tunneling in semiconductors and superconductors predictions of supercurrent properties through a tunnel barrier
	Ivar Giaever	US
	Brian D. Josephson	UK
1974	Antony Hewish	UK	} work in radio astronomy
	Martin Ryle	UK
1975	Aage N. Bohr	Denmark	} work on the atomic nucleus that paved the way for nuclear fusion
	Ben R. Mottelson	Denmark
	James Rainwater	US
1976	Burton Richter	US	} discovery of new class of elementary particles (psi, or J)
	Samuel C.C. Ting	US
1977	Philip W. Anderson	US	} contributions to understanding the behavior of electrons in magnetic, noncrystalline solids
	Nevill F. Mott	UK
	John H. Van Vleck	US
1978	Piotr L. Kapitsa	USSR	} research in magnetism and low-temperature physics discovery of cosmic microwave background radiation, providing support for the big-bang theory
	Arno Penzias	US
	Robert Woodrow Wilson	US
1979	Sheldon Lee Glashow	US	} contributions to the theory of the unified weak and electromagnetic interactions of subatomic particles
	Abdus Salam	Pakistan
	Steven Weinberg	US
1980	James Watson Cronin	US	} demonstration of the simultaneous violation of both charge-conjugation and parity-inversion symmetries
	Val Logsdon Fitch	US
1981	Nicolaas Bloembergen	US	} applications of lasers in spectroscopy
	Arthur L. Schawlow	US
	Kai M.B. Siegbahn	Sweden	} development of electron spectroscopy analysis of continuous phase transitions
1982	Kenneth G. Wilson	US
1983	Subrahmanyan Chandrasekhar	US	} contributions to understanding the evolution and devolution of stars studies of nuclear reactions key to the formation of chemical elements
	William A. Fowler	US
1984	Simon van der Meer	Neth.	} discovery of subatomic particles W and Z, which supports the electroweak theory
	Carlo Rubbia	Italy
1985	Klaus von Klitzing	W.Ger.	} discovery of the quantized Hall effect, permitting exact measurements of electrical resistance
1986	Gerd Binnig	W.Ger.	} development of the scanning tunneling electron microscope development of the electron microscope
	Heinrich Rohrer	Switz.
	Ernst Ruska	W.Ger.
1987	J. Georg Bednorz	W.Ger.	} discoveries of superconductivity in ceramic materials
	Karl Alex Müller	Switz.
1988	Leon Max Lederman	US	} research in subatomic particles
	Melvin Schwartz	US
	Jack Steinberger	US
1989	Hans Georg Dehmelt	US	} development of methods to isolate atoms and subatomic particles for study development of the atomic clock
	Wolfgang Paul	W.Ger.
	Norman Foster Ramsey	US
1990	Jerome Isaac Friedman	US	} discovery of atomic quarks
	Henry Way Kendall	US
	Richard E. Taylor	Canada
1991	Pierre-Gilles de Gennes	France	} discovery of general rules for behavior of molecules invention of a detector that traces subatomic particles

YEAR	WINNER(S)	COUNTRY	ACHIEVEMENT
1998	Robert B. Laughlin	US	discovery of fractional quantum Hall effect, showing that electrons in a low-temperature magnetic field can form a quantum fluid with fractional electric charges
	Horst L. Störmer	US
	Daniel C. Tsui	US
1999	Gerardus 't Hooft	Neth.	study of the quantum structure of electroweak interactions
	Martinus J.G. Veltman	Neth.
2000	Zhores I. Alferov	Russia	development of fast semiconductors for use in microelectronics
	Herbert Kroemer	Germany
	Jack S. Kilby	US
2001	Eric A. Cornell	US	achievement of Bose-Einstein condensation in dilute gases of alkali atoms; early fundamental studies of the properties of the condensates
	Wolfgang Ketterle	Germany
	Carl E. Wieman	US
2002	Raymond Davis, Jr.	US	pioneering contributions to astrophysics, in particular the detection of cosmic neutrinos
	Masatoshi Koshiba	Japan
	Riccardo Giacconi	US
2003	Alexei A. Abrikosov	US/Russia	pioneering contributions to the theory of superconductors and superfluids
	Vitaly L. Ginzburg	Russia
	Anthony J. Leggett	UK/US
2004	David J. Gross	US	discovery of asymptotic freedom in the theory of the strong interaction
	H. David Politzer	US
	Frank Wilczek	US
2005	Roy J. Glauber	US	contributions to quantum theory of optical coherence and to the development of laser-based precision spectroscopy, including the optical frequency comb technique
	John L. Hall	US
	Theodor W. Hänsch	Germany
2006	John C. Mather	US	discovery of the blackbody form and variability of cosmic microwave background radiation
	George F. Smoot	US
2007	Albert Fert	France	discovery of Giant Magnetoresistance (large resistance changes in materials composed of alternating layers of various metallic elements), a nanotechnology application
	Peter Grünberg	Germany
2008	Makoto Kobayashi	Japan	research on the origin of the broken symmetry in subatomic physics that predicts three families of quarks
	Toshihide Maskawa	Japan
	Yoichiro Nambu	US

Chemistry

YEAR	WINNER(S)	COUNTRY	ACHIEVEMENT
1901	Jacobus H. van 't Hoff	Neth.	discovery of the laws of chemical dynamics and osmotic pressure
1902	Emil Fischer	Germany	work on sugar and purine syntheses
1903	Svante Arrhenius	Sweden	theory of electrolytic dissociation
1904	William Ramsay	UK	discovery of inert gas elements and their places in the periodic system
1905	Adolf von Baeyer	Germany	work on organic dyes and hydroaromatic compounds
1906	Henri Moissan	France	isolation of fluorine; introduction of the Moissan furnace
1907	Eduard Buchner	Germany	discovery of noncellular fermentation
1908	Ernest Rutherford	UK	investigations into the disintegration of elements and the chemistry of radioactive substances
1909	Wilhelm Ostwald	Germany	pioneer work on catalysis, chemical equilibrium, and reaction velocities
1910	Otto Wallach	Germany	pioneer work in alicyclic combinations
1911	Marie Curie	France	discovery of radium and polonium; isolation of radium
1912	Victor Grignard	France	discovery of the Grignard reagents
	Paul Sabatier	France	method of hydrogenating organic compounds
1913	Alfred Werner	Switz.	work on the linkage of atoms in molecules
1914	Theodore W. Richards	US	accurate determination of various atomic weights
1915	Richard Willstätter	Germany	research in plant pigments, especially chlorophyll
1918	Fritz Haber	Germany	synthesis of ammonia
1920	Walther Hermann Nernst	Germany	work in thermochemistry
1921	Frederick Soddy	UK	investigation into the chemistry of radioactive substances and the occurrence and nature of isotopes
1922	Francis William Aston	UK	work with mass spectrographs; formulation of the whole-number rule
1923	Fritz Pregl	Austria	method of microanalysis of organic substances
1925	Richard Zsigmondy	Austria	elucidation of the heterogeneous nature of colloidal solutions

Chemistry (continued)

YEAR	WINNER(S)	COUNTRY	ACHIEVEMENT
1926	Theodor H.E. Svedberg	Sweden	work on disperse systems
1927	Heinrich Otto Wieland	Germany	research into the constitution of bile acids
1928	Adolf Windaus	Germany	research into the constitution of sterols and their connection with vitamins
1929	Hans von Euler-Chelpin	Sweden	} investigations into the fermentation of sugars and the enzyme action involved
	Arthur Harden	UK
1930	Hans Fischer	Germany	hemin, chlorophyll research; synthesis of hemin
1931	Friedrich Bergius	Germany	} invention and development of chemical high-pressure methods
	Carl Bosch	Germany
1932	Irving Langmuir	US	discoveries and investigations in surface chemistry
1934	Harold C. Urey	US	discovery of heavy hydrogen
1935	Frédéric and Irène Joliot-Curie	France	synthesis of new radioactive elements
1936	Peter Debye	Neth.	work on dipole moments and diffraction of X-rays and electrons in gases
1937	Norman Haworth	UK	research on carbohydrates and vitamin C
	Paul Karrer	Switz.	research on carotenoids, flavins, and vitamins
1938	Richard Kuhn (declined)	Germany	carotenoid and vitamin research
1939	Adolf Butenandt (declined)	Germany	work on sexual hormones
	Leopold Ruzicka	Switz.	work on polymethylenes and higher terpenes
1943	Georg Charles von Hevesy	Hungary	use of isotopes as tracers in chemical research
1944	Otto Hahn	Germany	discovery of the fission of heavy nuclei
1945	Artturi Ilmari Virtanen	Finland	invention of the fodder preservation method
1946	John Howard Northrop	US	} preparation of enzymes and virus proteins in pure form
	Wendell M. Stanley	US
	James B. Sumner	US	discovery of enzyme crystallization
1947	Robert Robinson	UK	investigation of alkaloids and other plant products
1948	Arne Tiselius	Sweden	research on electrophoresis and adsorption analysis; discoveries concerning serum proteins
1949	William Francis Giauque	US	behavior of substances at extremely low temperatures
1950	Kurt Alder	W.Ger.	} discovery and development of diene synthesis
	Otto Paul Hermann Diels	W.Ger.
1951	Edwin M. McMillan	US	} discovery of and research on transuranium elements
	Glenn T. Seaborg	US
1952	A.J.P. Martin	UK	} development of partition chromatography
	R.L.M. Synge	UK
1953	Hermann Staudinger	W.Ger.	work on macromolecules
1954	Linus Pauling	US	study of the nature of the chemical bond
1955	Vincent du Vigneaud	US	first synthesis of a polypeptide hormone
1956	Cyril N. Hinshelwood	UK	} work on the kinetics of chemical reactions
	Nikolay N. Semyonov	USSR
1957	Alexander Robertus Todd, Baron Todd (of Trumpington)	UK	work on nucleotides and nucleotide coenzymes
1958	Frederick Sanger	UK	determination of the structure of the insulin molecule
1959	Jaroslav Heyrovsky	Czechoslovakia	discovery and development of polarography
1960	Willard Frank Libby	US	development of radiocarbon dating
1961	Melvin Calvin	US	study of chemical steps that take place during photosynthesis
1962	John C. Kendrew	UK	} determination of the structure of hemoproteins
	Max Ferdinand Perutz	UK
1963	Giulio Natta	Italy	} research into the structure and synthesis of polymers in the field of plastics
	Karl Ziegler	W.Ger.
1964	Dorothy M.C. Hodgkin	UK	determination of the structure of biochemical compounds essential in combating pernicious anemia
1965	R.B. Woodward	US	synthesis of sterols, chlorophyll, and other substances
1966	Robert S. Mulliken	US	work concerning chemical bonds and the electronic structure of molecules
1967	Manfred Eigen	W.Ger.	} studies of extremely fast chemical reactions
	Ronald G.W. Norrish	UK
	George Porter	UK
1968	Lars Onsager	US	work on the theory of thermodynamics of irreversible processes
1969	Derek H.R. Barton	UK	} work in determining the actual three-dimensional shape of molecules
	Odd Hassel	Norway

YEAR	WINNER(S)	COUNTRY	ACHIEVEMENT
1970	Luis Federico Leloir	Argentina	discovery of sugar nucleotides and their role in the biosynthesis of carbohydrates
1971	Gerhard Herzberg	Canada	research in the structure of molecules
1972	Christian B. Anfinsen	US	fundamental contributions to the study of ribonuclease
	Stanford Moore	US
	William H. Stein	US
1973	Ernst Otto Fischer	W.Ger.	} organometallic chemistry
	Geoffrey Wilkinson	UK
1974	Paul J. Flory	US	studies of long-chain molecules
1975	John W. Cornforth	UK	} work in stereochemistry
	Vladimir Prelog	Switz.
1976	William N. Lipscomb, Jr.	US	studies on the structure of boranes
1977	Ilya Prigogine	Belgium	widening the scope of thermodynamics
1978	Peter Dennis Mitchell	UK	formulation of a theory of energy transfer processes in biological systems
1979	Herbert Charles Brown	US	} introduction of compounds of boron and phosphorus in the synthesis of organic substances
	Georg Wittig	W.Ger.
1980	Paul Berg	US	first preparation of a hybrid DNA
	Walter Gilbert	US	development of chemical and biological analyses of DNA structure
	Frederick Sanger	UK
1981	Kenichi Fukui	Japan	} orbital symmetry interpretation of chemical reactions
	Roald Hoffmann	US
1982	Aaron Klug	UK	} determination of the structure of biological substances
1983	Henry Taube	US
1984	Bruce Merrifield	US	development of a method of polypeptide synthesis
1985	Herbert A. Hauptman	US	} development of a way to map the chemical structure of small molecules
	Jerome Karle	US
1986	Dudley R. Herschbach	US	} development of methods for analyzing basic chemical reactions
	Yuan T. Lee	US
	John C. Polanyi	Canada
1987	Donald J. Cram	US	} development of molecules that can link with other molecules
	Jean-Marie Lehn	France
	Charles J. Pedersen	US
1988	Johann Deisenhofer	W.Ger.	} discovery of structure proteins needed in photosynthesis
	Robert Huber	W.Ger.
	Hartmut Michel	W.Ger.
1989	Sidney Altman	US	} discovery of certain basic properties of RNA
	Thomas Robert Cech	US
1990	Elias James Corey	US	development of retrosynthetic analysis for synthesis of complex molecules
1991	Richard R. Ernst	Switz.	improvements in nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy
1992	Rudolph A. Marcus	US	explanation of how electrons transfer between molecules
1993	Kary B. Mullis	US	} invention of techniques for gene study and manipulation
	Michael Smith	Canada
1994	George A. Olah	US	development of techniques to study hydrocarbon molecules
1995	Paul Crutzen	Neth.	} explanation of processes that deplete Earth's ozone layer
	Mario Molina	US
	F. Sherwood Rowland	US
1996	Robert F. Curl, Jr.	US	} discovery of new carbon compounds called fullerenes
	Harold W. Kroto	UK
	Richard E. Smalley	US
1997	Paul D. Boyer	US	} explanation of the enzymatic conversion of adenosine triphosphate
	John E. Walker	UK
	Jens C. Skou	Denmark
1998	Walter Kohn	US	discovery of sodium-potassium-activated adenosine triphosphatase
	John A. Pople	UK	development of the density-functional theory
1999	Ahmed H. Zewail	Egypt/US	development of computational methods in quantum chemistry study of the transition states of chemical reactions using femtosecond spectroscopy 2000	Alan J. Heeger	US	} discovery of plastics that conduct electricity
	Alan G. MacDiarmid	US
	Hideki Shirakawa	Japan

Chemistry (continued)

Dalmatians were originally bred as guard dogs for stagecoaches. Because they were used to running long distances and being around horses, and because their bright white coats with black spots were easily visible, they were chosen by fire departments to run ahead of horse-drawn fire engines, barking a warning and clearing the path of onlookers. With the advent of motorized fire trucks, Dalmatians were retained as the official mascot of firehouses everywhere.

Science Honors

Fields Medal

The Fields Medal, officially known as the International Medal for Outstanding Discoveries in Mathematics, is granted every four years to between two and four mathematicians for outstanding or groundbreaking research. It is traditionally given to mathematicians under the age of 40. Prize: Can$15,000 (about US$13,200).

YEAR	NAME	BIRTHPLACE	PRIMARY RESEARCH
1936	Lars Ahlfors	Helsinki, Finland	Riemann surfaces
	Jesse Douglas	New York NY	Plateau problem
1950	Laurent Schwartz	Paris, France	functional analysis
	Atle Selberg	Langesund, Norway	number theory
1954	Kunihiko Kodaira	Tokyo, Japan	algebraic geometry
	Jean-Pierre Serre	Bages, France	algebraic topology
1958	Klaus Roth	Breslau, Germany	number theory
	René Thom	Montbéliard, France	topology
1962	Lars Hörmander	Mjällby, Sweden	partial differential equations
	John Milnor	Orange NJ	differential topology
1966	Michael Atiyah	London, England	topology
	Paul Cohen	Long Branch NJ	set theory
	Alexandre Grothendieck	Berlin, Germany	algebraic geometry

YEAR	NAME	BIRTHPLACE	PRIMARY RESEARCH
1970	Alan Baker	London, England	number theory
	Heisuke Hironaka	Yamaguchi prefecture, Japan	algebraic geometry
	Sergey Novikov	Gorky, USSR (now in Russia)	topology
	John Thompson	Ottawa KS	group theory
1974	Enrico Bombieri	Milan, Italy	number theory
	David Mumford	Worth, Sussex, England	algebraic geometry
1978	Pierre Deligne	Brussels, Belgium	algebraic geometry
	Charles Fefferman	Washington DC	classical analysis
	Gregory Margulis	Moscow, USSR (now in Russia)	Lie groups
	Daniel Quillen	Orange NJ	algebraic K-theory
1983	Alain Connes	Darguignan, France	operator theory
	William Thurston	Washington DC	topology
	Shing-Tung Yau	Swatow, China	differential geometry
1986	Simon Donaldson	Cambridge, England	topology
	Gerd Faltings	Gelsenkirchen, West Germany	Mordell conjecture
	Michael Freedman	Los Angeles CA	Poincaré conjecture
1990	Vladimir Drinfeld	Kharkov, USSR (now in Ukraine)	algebraic geometry
	Vaughan Jones	Gisborne, New Zealand	knot theory
	Shigefumi Mori	Nagoya, Japan	algebraic geometry
	Edward Witten	Baltimore MD	superstring theory
1994	Jean Bourgain	Ostend, Belgium	analysis
	Pierre-Louis Lions	Grasse, France	partial differential equations
	Jean-Christophe Yoccoz	Paris, France	dynamical systems
	Yefim Zelmanov	Khabarovsk, USSR (now in Russia)	group theory
1998	Richard Borcherds	Cape Town, South Africa	mathematical physics
	William Gowers	Marlborough, Wiltshire, England	functional analysis
	Maksim Kontsevich	Khimki, USSR (now in Russia)	mathematical physics
	Curt McMullen	Berkeley CA	chaos theory
2002	Laurent Lafforgue	Antony, France	number theory and analysis
	Vladimir Voevodsky	Moscow, USSR (now in Russia)	algebraic geometry
2006	Andrei Okounkov	Moscow, USSR (now in Russia)	algebraic geometry
	Grigory Perelman (declined)	Leningrad, USSR (now in Russia)	Ricci flow
	Terence Tao	Adelaide, SA, Australia	prime numbers, nonlinear equations
	Wendelin Werner	Cologne, West Germany	mathematics of critical phenomena

National Medal of Science

The National Medal of Science was established by Congress in 1959. Awarded annually since 1962 by the National Science Foundation, it recognizes notable achievements in mathematics, engineering, and the physical, natural, and social sciences. A presidentially appointed committee selects the winners from a pool of nominees.

The New Age of Extinction

by Bryan Walsh, TIME

There have been five extinction waves in the planet's history—including the Permian extinction 250 million years ago, when an estimated 70% of all terrestrial animals and 96% of all marine creatures vanished, and, most recently, the Cretaceous event 65 million years ago, which ended the reign of the dinosaurs. Though scientists have directly assessed the viability of fewer than 3% of the world's described species, the sample polling of animal populations so far suggests that we may have entered what will be the planet's sixth great extinction wave. And this time the cause isn't an errant asteroid or megavolcanoes. It's us.

Through our growing numbers, our thirst for natural resources, and, most of all, climate change—which, by one reckoning, could help carry off 20% to 30% of all species before the end of the century—we're shaping an Earth that will be biologically impoverished. A 2008 assessment by the International Union for Conservation of Nature found that nearly one in four mammals worldwide was at risk for extinction, including endangered species like the famous Tasmanian devil. Overfishing and acidification of the oceans are threatening marine species as diverse as the bluefin tuna and reef-forming corals.

Scary for fishermen, yes, but the question arises, "Why should it matter to the rest of us?" After all, nearly all the species that were ever alive in the past are gone today. Evolution demands extinction. Why should the loss of a few species among millions matter? Answer: for one thing, we're animals too, dependent on this planet like every other form of life. When we pollute and deforest and make a mess of the ecological web, we're taking out mortgages on the Earth that we can't pay back—and those loans will come due. Then there are the undiscovered organisms and animals that could serve as the basis of needed medicines—as the original ingredients of aspirin were derived from the herb meadowsweet—unless we unwittingly destroy them first.

Forests razed can grow back, polluted air and water can be cleaned—but extinction is forever. And we're not talking about losing just a few species. In fact, conservationists quietly acknowledge that we've entered an age of triage, when we might have to decide which species can truly be saved. The worst-case scenarios of habitat loss and climate change show the planet losing hundreds of thousands to millions of species, many of which we haven't even discovered yet. The result could be a virtual genocide of much of the animal world.

So if you care about tigers and tamarins, rhinos and orangutans, if you believe Earth is more than just a home for 6.7 billion human beings and counting, then you should be scared. But fear shouldn't leave us paralyzed. Environmental groups worldwide are responding with new methods to new threats to wildlife.

Conservationists are working with locals on the ground, ensuring that the protection of endangered species is tied to the welfare of the people who live closest to them.

A strategy called avoided deforestation encourages environmental protection by putting a price on the carbon locked in rain forests and allowing countries to trade credits in an international market, provided that the carbon stays in the trees and is not cut or burned. And as global warming forces animals to migrate in order to escape changing climates, conservationists hope to create protected corridors that would give species room to roam. It's uncertain that any of this will stop the sixth extinction wave, let alone preserve the biodiversity we still enjoy, but we have no choice but to try. "We have a window of opportunity," says Kassie Siegel, director of the climate, energy, and air program of the Center for Biological Diversity (CBD). "But it's slamming shut."

Well-run ecotourism can provide support for conservation, but even the best parks might be hard-pressed to compete with the potential revenues from logging, poaching, or mining. The strategy of avoided deforestation, however, offers much more. Rain forests contain billions and billions of tons of carbon; destroying the trees and releasing the carbon not only kills local species but also speeds global warming. Proposals in the global climate negotiations would allow countries to offset some of their greenhouse-gas emissions by paying rain-forest nations to preserve their trees. It's win-win, with both the climate and the critters getting a boost.

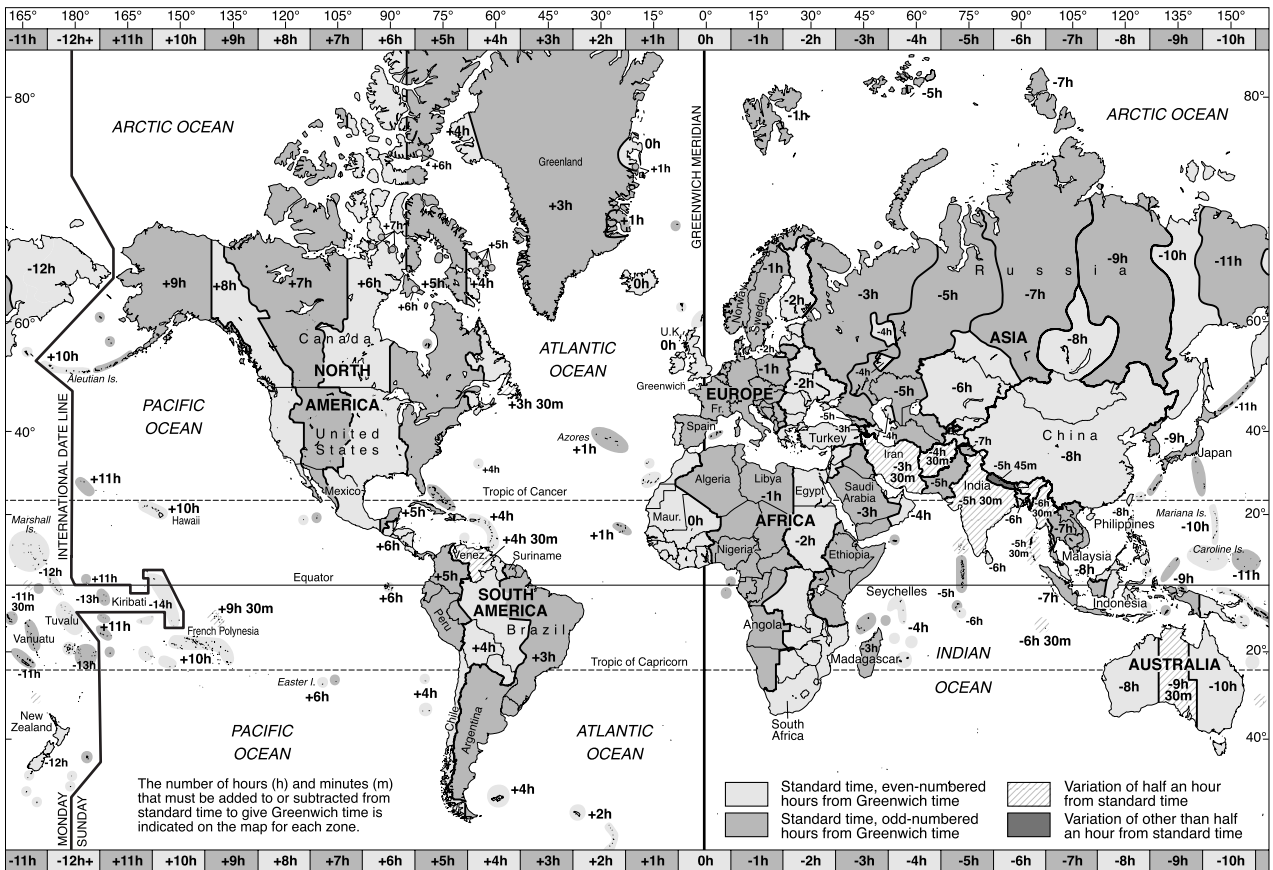

As global warming changes the climate, species will try to migrate, often right into the path of development and extinction. What good is a nature reserve—fought for, paid for, and protected—if global warming renders it unlivable? "Climate change could undermine the conservation work of whole generations," says Larry Schweiger, president of the National Wildlife Federation. "It turns out you can't save species without saving the sky."

That will mean reducing carbon emissions as fast as possible. In the US, the CBD has made an art out of using the Endangered Species Act, which mandates that the government prevent the extinction of listed species, to force Washington to act on global warming. The CBD's Siegel led a successful campaign to get the Bush administration to list the polar bear as threatened by climate change, and she expects more species to follow.

In a world where hundreds of millions of human beings still go hungry, it's easy to wonder why we should be concerned about the dwindling of the planet's biodiversity. The answer is that we can't afford not to. We can save life on this special planet—or be its unwitting executioner.

Daylight Saving Time

Also called summer time, daylight saving time is a system for uniformly advancing clocks, especially in summer, so as to extend daylight hours during conventional waking time. In the Northern Hemisphere, clocks are usually set ahead one hour in late March or in April and are set back one hour in late September or in October; most Southern Hemisphere countries that observe daylight saving time set clocks ahead in October or November and reset them in March or April. Equatorial countries do not observe daylight saving time because daylight hours stay about the same from season to season in the lower latitudes.

The practice was first suggested in a whimsical essay by Benjamin Franklin in 1784. In 1907 an Englishman, William Willett, campaigned for setting the clock ahead by 80 minutes in four moves of 20 minutes each during the spring and summer months. In 1908 the British House of Commons rejected a bill to advance the clock by one hour in the spring and return to Greenwich Mean (standard) Time in the autumn.

Several countries, including Australia, Great Britain, Germany, and the United States, adopted summer daylight saving time during World War I to conserve fuel by reducing the need for artificial light. During World War II, clocks were kept continuously advanced by an hour in some nations—for instance, in the US from 9 Feb 1942 to 30 Sep 1945—and England used “double summer time” during part of the year, advancing clocks two hours from the standard time during the summer and one hour during the winter months.

In 2005 the US Congress changed the law governing daylight saving time, moving the start of daylight saving time from the first Sunday in April to the second Sunday in March, while moving the end date from the last Sunday in October to the first Sunday in November starting in 2007. In most of the countries of Western Europe, daylight saving time starts on the last Sunday in March and ends on the last Sunday in October.

Julian and Gregorian Calendars

The Julian calendar, also called the Old Style calendar, is a dating system established by Julius Caesar as a reform of the Roman republican calendar. Caesar, advised by the Alexandrian astronomer Sosigenes, made the new calendar solar, not lunar, and he took the length of the solar year as 365¼ days. The year was divided into 12 months, all of which had either 30 or 31 days except February, which contained 28 days in common (365-day) years and 29 in every fourth year (a leap year, of 366 days). Because of misunderstandings, the calendar was not established in smooth operation until AD 8. Further, Sosigenes had overestimated the length of the year by 11 minutes 14 seconds, and by the mid-1500s, the cumulative effect of this error had shifted the dates of the seasons by about 10 days from Caesar's time.

This inaccuracy led Pope Gregory XIII to reform the Julian calendar. His Gregorian calendar, also called the New Style calendar, is still in general use. Gregory's proclamation in 1582 restored the calendar to the seasonal dates of AD 325, an adjustment of 10 days. Although the amount of regression was some 14 days by Pope Gregory's time, Gregory based his reform on restoration of the vernal equinox, then falling on 11 March, to the date (21 March) it had in AD 325, the time of the Council of Nicaea. Advancing the calendar 10 days after 4 Oct 1582, the day following being reckoned as 15 October, effected the change.

The Gregorian calendar differs from the Julian only in that no century year is a leap year unless it is exactly divisible by 400 (e.g., 1600, 2000). A further refinement, the designation of years evenly divisible by 4,000 as common (not leap) years, will keep the Gregorian calendar accurate to within one day in 20,000 years.

Jewish Calendar

The Jewish calendar is lunisolar—i.e., regulated by the positions of both the Moon and the Sun. It consists usually of 12 alternating lunar months of 29 and 30 days each (except for Heshvan and Kislev, which sometimes have either 29 or 30 days), and totals 353, 354, or 355 days per year. The average lunar year (354 days) is adjusted to the solar year (365¼ days) by the periodic introduction of leap years in order to assure that the major festivals fall in their proper season. The leap year consists of an additional 30-day month called First Adar, which always precedes the month of (Second) Adar. (During leap year, the Adar holidays are postponed to Second Adar.) A leap year consists of either 383, 384, or 385 days and occurs seven times during every 19-year period (the so-called Metonic cycle). Among the consequences of the lunisolar structure are these: (1) The number of days in a year may vary considerably, from 353 to 385 days. (2) The first day of a month can fall on any day of the week, that day varying from year to year. Consequently, the days of the week upon which an annual Jewish festival falls vary from year to year despite the festival's fixed position in the Jewish month. The months of the Jewish calendar and their Gregorian equivalents are as follows:

JEWISH MONTH	GREGORIAN MONTH(S)	JEWISH MONTH	GREGORIAN MONTH(S)
Tishri	September–October	Nisan	March–April
Heshvan, or Marheshvan	October–November	Iyyar	April–May
Kislev	November–December	Sivan	May–June
Tevet	December–January	Tammuz	June–July
Shevat	January–February	Av	July–August
Adar	February–March	Elul	August–September

Muslim Calendar

The Muslim calendar (also called the Islamic calendar, or Hijrah) is a dating system used in the Muslim world that is based on a year of 12 months. Each month begins with the sighting of the crescent of the new moon as it emerges from eclipse. The months of the Muslim calendar are Muharram, Safar, Rabi I, Rabi II, Jumada I, Jumada II, Rajab, Sha'ban, Ramadan, Shawwal, Dhu al-Qa'dah, and Dhu al-Hijjah.

In the standard Muslim calendar the months are alternately 30 and 29 days long except for the 12th month, Dhu al-Hijjah, the length of which is varied in a 30-year cycle intended to keep the calendar in step with the true phases of the Moon. In 11 years of this cycle, Dhu al-Hijjah has 30 days, and in the other 19 years it has 29. Thus the year has either 354 or 355 days. No months are intercalated, so that the named months do not remain in the same seasons but retrogress through the entire solar, or seasonal, year (of about 365.25 days) every 32.5 solar years.

There are some exceptions to this calendar in the Muslim world. Turkey uses the Gregorian calendar, while the Iranian Muslim calendar is based on a solar year. The Iranian calendar still begins from the same dating point as other Muslim calendars—that is, some 10 years prior to the death of Muhammad in AD 632. Thus, the Gregorian year AD 2010 corresponds to the Hijrah years of AH 1431–32.

Chinese Calendar

The Chinese calendar is a dating system used concurrently with the Gregorian (Western) calendar in China and Taiwan and in neighboring countries (e.g., Japan). The calendar consists of 12 months of alternately 29 and 30 days, equal to 354 or 355 days, or approximately 12 full lunar cycles. Intercalary months have been inserted to keep the calendar year in step with the solar year of about 365 days. Months have no names but are instead referred to by numbers within a year and sometimes also by a series of 12 animal names that from ancient times have been attached to years and to hours of the day.

The calendar also incorporates a meteorologic cycle that contains 24 points, each beginning one of the periods named. The establishment of this cycle required a fair amount of astronomical understanding of the Earth as a celestial body. Modern scholars acknowledge the superiority of pre-Sung Chinese astronomy (at least until about the 13th century AD) over that of other, contemporary nations.

The 24 points within the meteorologic cycle coincide with points 15° apart on the ecliptic (the plane of the Earth's yearly journey around the Sun or, if it is thought that the Sun turns around the Earth, the apparent journey of the Sun against the stars). It takes about 15.2 days for the Sun to travel from one of these points to another (because the ecliptic is a complete circle of 360°), and the Sun needs 365¼ days to finish its journey in this cycle. Supposedly, each of the 12 months of the year contains two points, but, because a lunar month has only 29½ days and the two points share about 30.4 days, there is always the chance that a lunar month will fail to contain both points, though the distance between any two given points is only 15°. If such an occasion occurs, the intercalation of an extra month takes place. For instance, one may find a year with two "Julys" or with two "Augusts" in the Chinese calendar. In fact, as mentioned above, the exact length of the month in the Chinese calendar is either 30 days or 29 days—a phenomenon that reflects its lunar origin.

Religious and Traditional Holidays

The word holiday comes from “holy day,” and it was originally a day of dedication to religious observance; in modern times a holiday may be of either religious or secular commemoration. All dates in this article are Gregorian.

Jewish holidays—The major holidays are the Pilgrim Festivals: Pesah (Passover), Shavuot (Feast of Weeks, or Pentecost), and Sukkoth (Tabernacles); and the High Holidays: Rosh Hashana (New Year) and Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement).

Pesah commemorates the Exodus from Egypt and the servitude that preceded it. As such, it is the most significant of the commemorative holidays, for it celebrates the very inception of the Jewish people—i.e., the event that provided the basis for the covenant between God and Israel. The term Pesah refers to the paschal (Passover) lamb sacrificed on the eve of the Exodus, the blood of which marked the Jewish homes to be spared from God’s plague. Leaven (se’or) and foods containing leaven (hametz) are neither to be owned nor consumed during Pesah. Aside from meats, fresh fruits, and vegetables, it is customary to consume only those foods prepared under rabbinic supervision and labeled “kosher for Passover.” The unleavened bread (matzo) consists entirely of flour and water. On the eve of Pesah families partake of the seder, an elaborate festival meal. The table is bedecked with an assortment of foods symbolizing the passage from slavery (e.g., bitter herbs) into freedom (e.g., wine). Pesah will begin at sundown on 30 March and end on 6 April in 2010. (All Jewish holidays begin at sundown.)

A distinctive Rosh Hashana observance is the sounding of the ram’s horn (shofar) at the synagogue service. Symbolic ceremonies, such as eating bread and apples dipped in honey, accompanied by prayers for a “sweet” and propitious year, are performed at the festive meals. In 2010 Rosh Hashana will begin at sundown on 8 September and will end on 10 September. Yom Kippur is a day when sins are confessed and expiated and man and God are reconciled. It is the holiest and most solemn day of the Jewish year. It is marked by fasting, penitence, and prayer. Working, eating, drinking, washing, anointing one’s body, engaging in sexual intercourse, and donning leather shoes are all forbidden. Yom Kippur begins at sundown on 17 September in 2010.

Though not as important theologically, the feast of Hanukkah has become socially significant, especially in Western cultures. Hanukkah commemorates the rededication (164 BCE) of the Second Temple of Jerusalem after its desecration three years earlier. Though modern Israel tends to emphasize the military victory of the general Judas Maccabeus, the distinctive rite of lighting the menorah also recalls the Talmud story of how the small supply of nondesecrated oil—enough for one day—miraculously burned in the Temple for eight full days until new oil could be obtained. During Hanukkah, in addition to the lighting of the ceremonial candles, gifts are exchanged and children play holiday games. The festival occurs 11 through 19 Dec 2009, subsequently spanning 1 through 9 Dec 2010.

Christian holidays—The major holidays celebrated by nearly all Christians are Easter and Christmas.

Easter celebrates the Resurrection of Jesus on the third day after his Crucifixion. In the Christian liturgical year, Easter is preceded by the period of Lent, the 40 days (not counting Sundays) before Easter, which traditionally were observed as a period of penance and fasting. Lent begins on Ash Wednesday, a day devoted to penitence. Holy Week precedes Easter Sunday and includes Mundy Thursday, the commemoration of Jesus’ last supper with his disciples; Good Friday, the day of his Crucifixion; and Holy Saturday, the transition between Crucifixion and Resurrection. Easter shares with Christmas the presence of numerous customs, some of which have little to do with the Christian celebration of the resurrection but clearly derive from folk customs. In 2010 the Western churches (nearly all Christian denominations) will observe Ash Wednesday on 17 February and Easter on 4 April. For Eastern Orthodox Christians, Lent begins on 15 February in 2010.

Christmas commemorates the birth of Jesus Christ. Since the early part of the 20th century, Christmas has also become a secular family holiday, observed by non-Christians, devoid of Christian elements, and marked by an increasingly elaborate exchange of gifts. In this secular Christmas celebration, a mythical figure named Santa Claus plays the pivotal role. Christmas is held on 25 December in most Christian cultures but occurs on the following 7 January in some Eastern Orthodox churches.

Islamic holidays—Ramadan is the holy month of fasting for Muslims. The Islamic ordinance prescribes abstinence from evil thoughts and deeds as well as from food, drink, and sexual intercourse from dawn until dusk throughout the month. The beginning and end of Ramadan are announced when one trustworthy witness testifies before the authorities that the new moon has been sighted; a cloudy sky may therefore delay or prolong the fast. The end of the fast is celebrated as the feast of ‘Id al-Fitr. Ramadan is scheduled to begin on 11 August in 2010 and ‘Id al-Fitr on 10 September of that year (all Islamic holidays begin at sundown). The Muslim New Year, Hijrah, is on 18 December in 2009 and 7 December in 2010.

After 'Id al-Fitr, the second major Islamic festival is 'Id al-Adha. Throughout the Muslim world, all who are able sacrifice sheep, goats, camels, or cattle and then divide the flesh equally among themselves, the poor, and friends and neighbors to commemorate the ransom of Ishmael with a ram. This festival falls at the end of the hajj, the pilgrimage to the holy city of Mecca in Saudi Arabia, which every adult Muslim of either sex must make at least once in his or her lifetime. 'Id al-Adha will be observed on 16 November in 2010.

'Ashura was originally designated in AD 622 by Muhammad as a day of fasting from sunset to sunset, probably patterned on the Jewish Day of Atonement, Yom Kippur. Among the Shi'ites, 'Ashura is a major festival that commemorates the death of Husayn (Hussein), son of 'Ali and grandson of Muhammad. It is a period of expressions of grief and of pilgrimage to Karbala (the site of Husayn's death, in present-day Iraq). 'Ashura is on 27 December in 2009 and 16 December in 2010.

Buddhist holidays—Holidays practiced by a large number of Buddhists are uposatha days and days that commemorate events in the life of the Buddha.

The four monthly holy days of ancient Buddhism continue to be observed in the Theravada countries of Southeast Asia. These uposatha days—the new moon and full moon days of each lunar month and the eighth day following the new and full moons—have their origin, according to some scholars, in the fast days that preceded the Vedic soma sacrifices.

The three major events of the Buddha's life—his birth, Enlightenment, and entrance into final nirvana—are commemorated in all Buddhist countries but not everywhere on the same day. In the Theravada countries the three events are all observed together on Vesak, the full moon day of the sixth lunar month, which usually occurs in May. In Japan and other Mahayana countries, the three anniversaries of the Buddha are observed on separate days (in some countries the birth date is 8 April, the Enlightenment date is 8 December, and the death date is 15 February).

Chinese holidays—The Chinese New Year is celebrated with a big family meal, and presents of cash are given to children in red envelopes. In 2010 the Chinese New Year will be on 14 February.

During the Chinese Moon Festival, on the 15th day of the 8th month of the lunar calendar, people return to their homes to visit with their family. The traditional food is moon cakes, round pastries stuffed with food such as red bean paste. The Moon Festival will occur on 22 September in 2010.

Japanese holidays—The Japanese celebrate 7-5-3 day (Shichi-go-san no hi), in which parents bring children of those ages to the Shinto shrine to pray for their continued health. This day is held on 15 November.

In mid-July (or mid-August, in some areas) the Japanese celebrate Bon (also known as Bon Matsuri, or Urabon). The festival honors the spirits of deceased householders and of the dead generally. Memorial stones are cleaned, community dances are performed, and paper lanterns and fires are lit to welcome the dead and to bid them farewell at the end of their visit. The Shinto New Year, Gantan-sai, is celebrated on 1–3 January.

Hindu holidays—Dussehra celebrates the victory of Rama over Ravana, the symbol of evil on earth. In 2010 Dussehra falls on 17 October. Diwali is a festival of lights devoted to Lakshmi, the goddess of wealth. During the festival, small earthenware lamps filled with oil are lit and placed in rows along the parapets of temples and houses and set adrift on rivers and streams. Diwali is on 5 November in 2010. Maha-sivaratri, the most important sectarian festival of the year for devotees of the Hindu god Shiva, occurs on 12 February in 2010. Holi is a spring festival, probably of ancient origin. Participants throw colored waters and powders on one another, and, on this day, the usual restrictions of caste, sex, status, and age are disregarded. It will be on 1 March in 2010.

Sikh holidays—Sikhs observe all festivals celebrated by the Hindus of northern India. In addition, they celebrate the birthdays of the first and the last Gurus and the martyrdom of the fifth (Arjun) and the ninth (Tegh Bahadur). In 2010 Guru Nanak Dev Sahib's birthday is celebrated on 21 November, and that of Guru Gobind Singh Sahib is celebrated on 5 January in 2011. On 16 June in 2011 Arjun's martyrdom is observed. Kachi lassi (sweetened milk) is offered to passersby to commemorate his death. On 24 November in 2011 the martyrdom of Tegh Bahadur is observed.

Baha'i holidays—The Baha'i New Year (Naw Ruz) in 2010 will fall on 21 March (all Baha'i holidays begin at sundown). Other important observances include the declaration of the Bab (23 May), the Baha Ullah's birth (12 November), and Ascension (29 May).

Zoroastrian holidays—Noruz (New Day) is on 21 March for 2010, and the 28th of that month is Khoradad Sal, the birth of the prophet Zarathustra.

African American holiday—Kwanzaa (Swahili for "First Fruits") is celebrated each year from 26 December to 1 January and is patterned after various African harvest festivals. Maulana Karenga, a black-studies professor, created Kwanzaa in 1966 as a nonreligious celebration of family and social values. Each day of Kwanzaa is dedicated to one of seven principles: unity (umoja), self-determination (kuji-chagulia), collective responsibility (ujima), cooperative economics (ujamaa), purpose (nia), creativity (kuumba), and faith (imani).

A small-scale climatic stage that affected most parts of the world and lasted roughly from the beginning of the 16th century until the mid-19th century is known as the Little Ice Age. The harsh winters, moist, cool summers, and advancing ice sheets that characterized the Little Ice Age led to crop failures and the abandonment of the northern villages, and it necessitated the altering of oceanic sailing routes.

Perpetual Calendar

The perpetual calendar is a type of dating system that makes it possible to find the correct day of the week for any date over a wide range of years. Aspects of the perpetual calendar can be found in the Jewish religious and the Julian calendars, and some form of it has appeared in many proposed calendar reforms.

To find the day of the week for any Gregorian or Julian date in the perpetual calendar provided in this table, first find the proper dominical letter (one of the letters A through G) for the year in the upper table. Leap years have two dominical letters, the first applicable to dates in January and February, the second to dates in the remaining months. Then find the same dominical letter in the lower table, in whichever column it appears opposite the month in question. The days then fall as given in the lowest section of the column.

Civil Holidays

DAY	EVENT
1 January	New Year's Day, the first day of the modern calendar (various countries)
20 January	Inauguration Day, for quadrennial inauguration of US president
26 January	Australia Day, commemorates the establishment of the first British settlement in Australia
3rd Monday in January	Martin Luther King Day, for birth of US civil rights leader
2nd new moon after winter solstice (at the earliest 21 January and at the latest 19 February)	New Year, for Chinese lunar year, inaugurating a 15-day celebration
6 February	Waitangi Day, for Treaty of Waitangi, granting British sovereignty (New Zealand)
11 February	National Foundation Day, for founding by first emperor (Japan)
14 February	St. Valentine's Day, celebrating the exchange of love messages and named for either of two 3rd-century Christian martyrs (various)
3rd Monday in February	Presidents' Day, Washington-Lincoln Day, or Washington's Birthday, for birth-days of US Presidents George Washington and Abraham Lincoln
8 March	International Women's Day, celebration of the women's liberation movement
17 March	St. Patrick's Day, for patron saint of Ireland (Ireland and various)
21 or 22 March	Vernal Equinox Day, for beginning of spring (Japan)
25 March	Independence Day, for proclamation of independence from the Ottoman Empire (Greece)
4th Sunday in Lent	Mothering Day (UK)
1 April	April Fools' Day, or All Fools' Day, day for playing jokes, falling one week after the old New Year's Day of 25 March (various)
5 April	Qingming, for sweeping tombs and honoring the dead (China)
7 April	World Health Day, for founding of World Health Organization
22 April	Earth Day, for conservation and reclaiming of the natural environment (various)
25 April	ANZAC Day, for landing at Gallipoli (Australia/New Zealand/Samoa/Tonga)
29 April	Green Day, national holiday for environment and nature (Japan)
30 April	Queen's Birthday, for Queen Beatrix's investiture and former queen Juliana's birthday (The Netherlands)
1 May	May Day, celebrated as labor day or as festival of flowers (various)
3 May	Constitution Memorial Day, for establishment of democratic government (Japan)
5 May	Children's Day, honoring children (Japan/Republic of Korea)
5 May	Cinco de Mayo, anniversary of Mexico's victory over France in the Battle of Puebla (Mexico)
8/9 May	V-E Day, or Liberation Day, for end of World War II in Europe (various)
2nd Sunday in May	Mother's Day, honoring mothers (US)
Monday on or preceding 25 May	Victoria Day, for Queen Victoria's birthday (Canada)
30 or last Monday in May	Memorial Day, or Decoration Day, in honor of the deceased, especially the war dead (US)
2 June	Anniversary of the Republic, for referendum establishing republic (Italy)
5 June	Constitution Day (Denmark)
6 June	National Day, for Gustav I Vasa's ascension to the throne and adoption of Constitution (Sweden)
10 June	Portugal's Day, or Camões Memorial Day, anniversary of Luis de Camões's death
14 June	Flag Day, honoring flag (US)
3rd Saturday in June	Queen's Official Birthday, for Queen Elizabeth II (UK/New Zealand)
3rd Sunday in June	Father's Day, honoring fathers (US)
23 June	National Day, for Grand Duke Jean's official birthday (Luxembourg)
23–24 June	Midsummer Eve and Midsummer Day, celebrating the return of summer (various European) last Sunday in June	Gay and Lesbian Pride Day, final day of weeklong advocacy of rights of gay men and lesbians (international)
1 July	Canada Day (formerly Dominion Day), for establishment of dominion
4 July	Independence Day, for Declaration of Independence from Britain (US)
12 July	Orangemen's Day, or Orange Day, anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne (Northern Ireland)
14 July	Bastille Day, for fall of the Bastille and onset of French Revolution (France)
21 July	National Day, for separation from The Netherlands (Belgium)
1 August	National Day, anniversary of the founding of the Swiss Confederation (Switzerland)
6 August	Hiroshima Day, for dropping of atomic bomb (Japan)
full-moon day of 8th lunar month	Chusok, harvest festival (Republic of Korea)
1st Monday in September	Labor Day, tribute to workers (US/Canada)
15 September	Respect-for-the-Aged Day, for the elderly (Japan)
16 September	Independence Day, for independence from Spain (Mexico)
23 or 24 September	Autumnal Equinox Day, for beginning of autumn; in honor of ancestors (Japan)

DAY	EVENT
two weeks ending on 1st Sunday in October	Oktoberfest, festival of food and drink, formerly commemorating marriage of King Louis (Ludwig) I (Germany)
3 October	Day of German Unity, for reunification of Germany
5 October	Republic Day, for founding of the republic (Portugal)
12 or 2nd Monday in October	Hispanic Day, Columbus Day, Discovery Day, or Day of the Race, for Christopher Columbus's discovery of the New World on behalf of Spain (Spain and various)
2nd Monday in October	Thanksgiving Day, harvest festival (Canada)
24 October	United Nations Day, for effective date of UN Charter (international)
26 October	National Day, for end of postwar occupation and return of sovereignty (Austria)
31 October	Halloween, or All Hallows' Eve, festive celebration of ghosts and spirits, on eve of All Saints' Day (various)
5 November	Guy Fawkes Day, anniversary of the Gunpowder Plot to blow up the king and Parliament (UK)
11 November	Armistice Day, Remembrance Day, or Veterans Day, honoring participants in past wars and recalling the Armistice of World War I (various)
23 November	Labor Thanksgiving Day, honoring workers (Japan)
4th Thursday in November	Thanksgiving Day, harvest festival (US)
16 December	Day of Reconciliation, for promoting national unity (South Africa)
23 December	Emperor's Birthday, for birthday of Emperor Akihito (Japan)
26 December	Boxing Day, second day of Christmas, for giving presents to service people (various)
31 December	New Year's Eve, celebration ushering out the old year and in the new year (various)

The Universe

Astronomical Constants

QUANTITY	SYMBOL	VALUE
astronomical unit	AU	length of the semimajor axis of the Earth's orbit around the Sun—149,597,870 km (92,955,808 mi) measures large distances in space; equals the average distance from the Earth to the Sun
parsec	pc	one parsec equals 3.26 light-years measures the distance at which the radius of the Earth's orbit subtends an angle of one second of arc light-year	ly	$9.46089 \times 10^{12}$ km ( $5.8787 \times 10^{12}$ mi) measures the distance traveled by light moving in a vacuum in the course of one year speed of light (in a vacuum)	c	$2.99792458 \times 10^{10}$ cm per sec (186,282 mi per sec)
mass of the Sun	Sun M .	$1.989 \times 10^{30}$ kg (330,000 times the mass of the Earth)
radius of the Sun	Sun R .	$6.96 \times 10^8$ m (109 times the radius of Earth)
Earth's mean radius		6,378 km (3,963 mi)
mean solar day (on Earth)		24 h 3 min 56.55 sec of mean sidereal time the interval between two successive passages of the Sun across the same meridian is a solar day; in practice, since the rate of the Sun's motion varies with the seasons, use is made of a fictitious Sun that always moves across the sky at an even rate
tropical (or solar) year (on Earth)		365.242 days the time required for the Earth's orbital motion to return the Sun's position to the spring equinoctial point
synodic month (on Earth)		29.53 days the time required for the Moon to pass through one complete cycle of phases

Definitions of Astronomical Positions

A conjunction is an apparent meeting or passing of two or more celestial bodies. For example, the Moon is in conjunction with the Sun at the phase of new Moon, when it moves between the Earth and Sun and the side turned toward the Earth is dark. Inferior planets—those with orbits smaller than the Earth's (namely, Venus and Mercury)—have two kinds of conjunctions with the Sun. An inferior conjunction occurs when the planet passes approximately between Earth and Sun; if it passes exactly between them, moving across the Sun's face as seen from Earth, it is said to be in transit (see below). A superior conjunction occurs when Earth and the other planet are on opposite sides of the Sun, but all three bodies are again nearly in a straight line. Superior planets, those having orbits larger than the Earth's can have only superior conjunctions with the Sun.

When celestial bodies appear in opposite directions in the sky they are said to be in opposition. The Moon, when full, is said to be in opposition to the Sun (the Earth is then approximately between them). A superior planet (one with an orbit farther from the Sun than Earth's) is in opposition when Earth passes between it and the Sun. The opposition of a planet is a good time to observe it, because the planet is then at its nearest point to the Earth and in its full phase. The inferior planets, Venus and Mercury, can never be in opposition to the Sun.

When a celestial body as seen from the Earth makes a right angle with the direction of the Sun it is said to be in quadrature. The Moon at first or last quarter is said to be at east or west quadrature, respectively. A superior planet is at west quadrature when its position is 90° west of the Sun.

The east–west coordinate by which the position of a celestial body is ordinarily measured is known as the right ascension. Right ascension in combination with declination defines the position of a celestial object. Declination is the angular distance of a body north or south of the celestial equator. North declination is considered positive and south, negative. Thus, +90° declination marks the north celestial pole, 0° the celestial equator, and –90° the south celestial pole. The symbol for right ascension is the Greek letter  $\alpha$  (alpha) and for declination the lowercase Greek letter  $\Delta$  (delta).

The angular distance in celestial longitude separating the Moon or a planet from the Sun is known as elongation. The greatest elongation possible for the two inferior planets is about 48° in the case of Venus and about 28° in that of Mercury. Elongation may also refer to the angular distance of any celestial body from another around which it revolves or from a particular point in the sky; e.g., the extreme east or west position of a star with reference to the north celestial pole.

The point at which a planet is closest to the Sun is called the perihelion, and the most distant point in that planet's orbit is the aphelion. The term helion refers specifically to the Sun as the primary body about which the planet is orbiting.

Occultation refers to the obscuring of the light of an astronomical body, most commonly a star, by another astronomical body, such as a planet or a satellite. Hence, a solar eclipse is the occultation of the Sun by the Moon. From occultations of stars by planets, asteroids, and satellites, astronomers are able to determine the precise sizes and shapes of the latter bodies in addition to the temperatures of planetary atmospheres. For example, astronomers unexpectedly discovered the rings of Uranus during a stellar occultation on 10 Mar 1977.

A complete or partial obscuring of a celestial body by another is an eclipse; these occur when three celestial objects become aligned. The Sun is eclipsed when the Moon comes between it and the Earth; the Moon is eclipsed when it moves into the shadow of the Earth cast by the Sun. Eclipses of natural or artificial satellites of a planet occur as the satellites move into the planet's shadow. When the apparent size of the eclipsed body is much smaller than that of the eclipsing body, the phenomenon is known as an occultation (see above). Examples are the disappearance of a star, nebula, or planet behind the Moon, or the vanishing of a natural satellite or space probe behind some body of the solar system. A transit (see above) occurs when, as viewed from the Earth, a relatively small body passes across the disk of a larger body, usually the Sun or a planet, eclipsing only a very small area: Mercury and Venus periodically transit the Sun, and a satellite may transit its planet.

When an object orbiting the Earth is at the point in its orbit that is the greatest distance from the center of the Earth, this point is known as apogee; the term is also used to describe the point farthest from a planet or a satellite (as the Moon) reached by an object orbiting it. Perigee is the opposite of apogee.

The difference in direction of a celestial object as seen by an observer from two widely separated points is termed parallax. The measurement of parallax is used directly to find the distance of the body from the Earth (geocentric parallax) and from the Sun (heliocentric parallax). The two positions of the observer and the position of the object form a triangle; if the base line between the two observing points is known and the direction of the object as seen from each has been measured, the apex angle (the parallax) and the distance of the object from the observer can be determined.

An hour angle is the angle between an observer's meridian (a great circle passing over his head and through the celestial poles) and the hour circle (any other great circle passing through the poles) on which some celestial body lies. This angle, when expressed in hours and minutes, is the time elapsed since the celestial body's last transit of the observer's meridian. The hour angle can also be expressed in degrees, 15° of arc being equal to one hour.

Constellations

From the earliest times the star groups known as constellations, the smaller groups (parts of constellations) known as asterisms, and, also, individual stars have received names connoting some meteorological phenomena or symbolizing religious or mythological beliefs. At one time it was held that the constellation names and myths were of Greek origin, but it is now thought that they are primarily of Semitic or even pre-Semitic origin and that they came to the Greeks through the Phoenicians.

Constellations (continued)

The Alexandrian astronomer Ptolemy lists the names and orientation of 48 constellations in his Almagest, and, with but few exceptions, they are identical with those used at the present time. The majority of the remaining 40 constellations that are now accepted were added by European astronomers in the 17th and 18th centuries. In the 20th century the delineation of precise boundaries for all 88 constellations was undertaken by a committee of the International Astronomical Union.

NAME	GENITIVE	MEANING	NOTES
Constellations described by Ptolemy: the zodiac
Aries	Arietis	Ram	Aldebaran is the constellation's brightest star. Taurus also contains the Pleiades star cluster and the Crab Nebula.
Taurus	Tauri	Bull
Gemini	Geminorum	Twins	The brightest stars in Gemini are Castor and Pollux .
Cancer	Cancri	Crab	Cancer contains the well-known star cluster Praesepe .
Leo	Leonis	Lion	Regulus is the brightest star in Leo.
Virgo	Virginis	Virgin	Spica is the brightest star in Virgo.
Libra	Librae	Balance	Antares is the brightest star of Scorpius. The center of the Milky Way Galaxy lies in Sagittarius, with the densest star clouds of the galaxy.
Scorpius	Scorpii	Scorpion
Sagittarius	Sagittarii	Archer
Capricornus	Capricorni	Sea-goat
Aquarius	Aquarii	Water-bearer	Other Ptolemaic constellations
Pisces	Piscium	Fishes
Andromeda	Andromedae	Andromeda (an Ethiopian princess of Greek legend)
Aquila	Aquilae	Eagle
Ara	Arae	Altar	The brightest star in Aquila is Altair .
Argo Navis	Argus Navis	the ship Argo	Argo Navis is now divided into smaller constellations that include Carina, Puppis, Pyxis, and Vela.
Auriga	Aurigae	Charioteer	The brightest star in Auriga is Capella . The constellation also contains open star clusters M36, M37, and M38.
Boötes	Boötis	Herdsmen	Arcturus is the brightest star in Boötes.
Canis Major	Canis Majoris	Greater Dog	Sirius is the brightest star in Canis Major.
Canis Minor	Canis Minoris	Smaller Dog	Procyon is the brightest star in Canis Minor.
Cassiopeia	Cassiopeiae	Cassiopeia was a legendary queen of Ethiopia	Tycho's nova, one of the few recorded supernovae in the Galaxy, appeared in Cassiopeia in 1572.
Centaurus	Centauri	Centaur (possibly represents Chiron)	Alpha Centauri in Centaurus contains Proxima, the nearest star to the Sun.
Cepheus	Cephei	Cepheus (legendary king of Ethiopia)	Delta Cephei was the prototype for cepheid variables (a class of variable stars).
Cetus	Ceti	Whale	Mira Ceti was the first recognized variable star.
Corona Austrina	Coronae Austrinae	Southern Crown	Cygnus contains the asterism known as the Northern Cross; the constellation's brightest star is Deneb .
Corona Borealis	Coronae Borealis	Northern Crown
Corvus	Corvi	Raven
Crater	Crateris	Cup
Cygnus	Cygni	Swan	Delphinus contains the asterism known as Job's Coffin.
Delphinus	Delphini	Dolphin	Draco contains the star Thuban, which was the polestar in 3000 bc.
Draco	Draconis	Dragon	Achernar is the brightest star in Eridanus.
Equuleus	Equulei	Little Horse
Eridanus	Eridani	River Eridanus or river god	Hercules contains the great globular star cluster M13.
Hercules	Herculis	Hercules (Greek hero)	Hydra contains the asterism known as the Water Snake.
Hydra	Hydrae	Water Snake
Lepus	Leporis	Hare
Lupus	Lupi	Wolf

NAME	GENITIVE	MEANING	NOTES
Other Ptolemaic constellations (continued)
Lyra	Lyrae	Lyre	The brightest star in Lyra is Vega . In some 10,000 years, Vega will become the polestar. Lyra also contains the Ring Nebula (M57).
Ophiuchus	Ophiuchi	Serpent-bearer
Orion	Orionis	Hunter	Rigel is the brightest star in Orion; M42 (the Great Nebula) resides in Orion.
Pegasus	Pegasi	Pegasus (winged horse)	The constellation contains stars of the Great Square of Pegasus.
Perseus	Persei	Perseus (legendary Greek hero)
Piscis Austrinus	Piscis Austrini	Southern Fish	The brightest star in Piscis Austrinus is Fomalhaut .
Sagitta	Sagittae	Arrow
Serpens	Serpentis	Serpent
Triangulum	Trianguli	Triangle	The constellation contains M33, a nearby spiral galaxy.
Ursa Major	Ursae Majoris	Great Bear	The seven brightest stars of this constellation are the Big Dipper (also called the Plough).
Ursa Minor	Ursae Minoris	Lesser Bear	Ursa Minor contains Polaris (the north polestar).

Southern constellations, added c. 1600

Apus	Apodis	Bird of Paradise
Chamaeleon	Chamaeleontis	Chameleon
Dorado	Doradus	Swordfish	The most notable object in Dorado is the Large Magellanic Cloud.
Grus	Gruis	Crane
Hydrus	Hydri	Water Snake
Indus	Indi	Indian
Musca	Muscae	Fly
Pavo	Pavonis	Peacock
Phoenix	Phoenicis	Phoenix (mythical bird)
Triangulum Australe	Trianguli Australis	Southern Triangle
Tucana	Tucanae	Toucan	The most notable object in Tucana is the Small Magellanic Cloud.
Volans	Volantis	Flying Fish

Constellations of Bartsch, 1624

Camelopardalis	Camelopardalis	Giraffe
Columba	Columbae	Dove
Monoceros	Monocerotis	Unicorn

Constellations of Hevelius, 1687

Canes Venatici	Canum Venaticorum	Hunting Dogs	The constellation contains M51 (the Whirlpool Galaxy).
Lacerta	Lacertae	Lizard
Leo Minor	Leonis Minoris	Lesser Lion
Lynx	Lyncis	Lynx
Scutum	Scuti	Shield	Scutum contains the Scutum star cloud in the Milky Way.
Sextans	Sextantis	Sextant
Vulpecula	Vulpeculae	Fox	Vulpecula contains M27 (the Dumbbell Nebula).

Ancient asterisms that are now separate constellations

Carina	Carinae	Keel [of the Argo , a legendary ship]	The brightest star in Carina is Canopus .
Coma Berenices	Comae Berenices	Berenice's Hair	The constellation contains both a coma (star cluster) and the north galactic pole (a point that lies perpendicular to the Milky Way).
CruX	Crucis	[Southern] Cross
Puppis	Puppis	Stern [of the Argo ]
Pyxis	Pyxidis	Compass [of the Argo ]
Vela	Velorum	Sails [of the Argo ]

NAME	GENITIVE	MEANING	NOTES
Southern constellations of Lacaille, c. 1750
Antlia	Antliae	Pump
Caelum	Caeli	[Sculptor's] Chisel
Circinus	Circini	Drawing Compasses
Fornax	Fornacis	[Chemical] Furnace
Horologium	Horologii	Clock
Mensa	Mensae	Table [Mountain]
Microscopium	Microscopii	Microscope
Norma	Normae	Square
Octans	Octantis	Octant	Octans contains the south celestial pole.
Pictor	Pictoris	Painter's [Easel]
Reticulum	Reticuli	Reticule
Sculptor	Sculptoris	Sculptor's [Workshop]	Sculptor contains the south galactic pole.
Telescopium	Telescopii	Telescope

Astrology: The Zodiac

Signs of the zodiac are popularly used for divination as well as for designation of constellations.

NAME	SYMBOL	DATES	SEX/NATURE	TRIPPLICITY	HOUSE	EXALTATION
Aries the Ram	♈	21 Mar–19 Apr	masculine/moving	fire	Mars	Sun (19°)
Taurus the Bull	♉	20 Apr–20 May	feminine/fixed	earth	Venus	Moon (3°)
Gemini the Twins	♊	21 May–21 Jun	masculine/common	air	Mercury
Cancer the Crab	♋	22 Jun–22 Jul	feminine/moving	water	Moon	Jupiter (15°)
Leo the Lion	♌	23 Jul–22 Aug	masculine/fixed	fire	Sun
Virgo the Virgin	♍	23 Aug–22 Sep	feminine/common	earth	Mercury	Mercury (15°)
Libra the Balance	♎	23 Sep–23 Oct	masculine/moving	air	Venus	Saturn (21°)
Scorpius the Scorpion	♏	24 Oct–21 Nov	feminine/fixed	water	Mars
Sagittarius the Archer	♐	22 Nov–21 Dec	masculine/common	fire	Jupiter
Capricorn the Goat	♑	22 Dec–19 Jan	feminine/moving	earth	Saturn	Mars (28°)
Aquarius the Water Bearer	♒	20 Jan–18 Feb	masculine/fixed	air	Saturn
Pisces the Fish	♓	19 Feb–20 Mar	feminine/common	water	Jupiter	Venus (27°)

Classification of Stars

The spectral sequence O–M represents stars of essentially the same chemical composition but of different temperatures and atmospheric pressures. Stars belonging to other, more rare types of spectral classifications differ in chemical composition from those stars classified under the O–M scheme.

Each spectral class is additionally subdivided into 10 spectral types. For example, spectral class A is subdivided into spectral types A0–A9 with 0 being the hottest and 9 the coolest. (Spectral class O is unusual in that it is subdivided into O4–O9.) Between two stars of the same spectral type, the more luminous star will also be larger in diameter. Thus the Yerkes system of luminosity also tells something of a star's radius, with Ia being the largest and V the smallest. Approximately 90% of all stars are main-sequence, or type V, stars.

Based upon these systems, the Sun would be a G2 V star (a yellow, relatively hot dwarf star).

SPECTRAL CLASS	COLOR	APPROXIMATE SURFACE TEMP (°C)	EXAMPLES
O	blue	30,000 or greater	these stars are relatively rare
B	blue-white	20,000 to 30,000	Rigel, Alpha Crucis, Beta Crucis
A	white	10,000 to 20,000	Sirius, Vega, Fomalhaut
F	yellow-white	7,000 to 10,000	Canopus, Procyon
G	yellow	6,000 to 7,000	Sun
K	orange	4,500 to 6,000	Arcturus, Aldebaran
M	red	3,000 to 4,500	Betelgeuse, Antares

LUMINOSITY CLASSES (BASED UPON THE YERKES SYSTEM)

Ia	most luminous supergiants
Ib	luminous supergiants
II	bright giants
III	normal giants
IV	subgiants
V	main-sequence stars (dwarfs)

Morning and Evening Stars

This table gives the morning and evening stars for autumn 2009 through 2010. The morning and evening stars are actually planets visible to the naked eye during the early morning and at evening twilight.

PLANET	MORNING STAR	EVENING STAR
Mercury	28 Sep–23 Oct 2009; 11 Jan–4 Mar, 8 May–21 Jun, 11 Sep–5 Oct, 26–31 Dec 2010	1–14 Sep, 22 Nov–30 Dec 2009; 24 Mar–20 Apr, 6 Jul–27 Aug, 1 Nov–14 Dec 2010
Venus	1 Sep–1 Dec 2009; 4 Nov–31 Dec 2010	23 Feb–24 Oct 2010
Mars	1 Sep–31 Dec 2009; 1–29 Jan 2010	29 Jan–5 Dec 2010
Jupiter	14 Mar–21 Sep 2010	1 Sep–31 Dec 2009; 1 Jan–15 Feb, 21 Sep–31 Dec 2010
Saturn	6 Oct–31 Dec 2009; 1 Jan–22 Mar, 19 Oct–31 Dec 2010	22 Mar–13 Sep 2010
Uranus	1 Sep–mid-December 2009; early April–mid-December 2010	mid-December 2009–late February 2010, mid-December–31 Dec 2010
Neptune	1 Sep–mid-November 2009; early March–mid-November 2010	mid-November–31 Dec 2009; 1 Jan–late January, mid-November–31 Dec 2010

Characteristics of Celestial Bodies

Mean orbital velocity indicates the average speed at which a planet orbits the Sun unless otherwise specified. Inclination of orbit to ecliptic indicates the angle of tilt between a planet's orbit and the plane of Earth's orbit (essentially the plane of the solar system). Orbital period indicates the planet's sidereal year (in Earth days except where noted). Rotation period indicates the planet's sidereal day (in Earth days except where noted). Inclination of equator to orbit indicates the angle of tilt between a planet's orbit and its equator. Gravitational acceleration is a measure of the body's gravitational pull on other objects. Escape velocity is the speed needed at the surface to escape the planet's gravitational pull. Eccentricity of orbit is a measure of the circularity or elongation of an orbit; 0 indicates circular orbits, and closer to 1 more elliptical ones.

Sun

diameter (at equator): 1.39 million km (863,705 mi) mass (in  $10^{20}$  kg): 19.8 billion density (mass/volume, in  $\text{kg}/\text{m}^3$ ): 1,408 mean orbital velocity: the Sun orbits the Milky Way's center at around 220 km/sec (136.7 mi/sec) orbital period: the Sun takes approximately 250 million Earth years to complete its orbit around the Milky Way's center rotation period: 25–36 Earth days

gravitational acceleration: 275  $\text{m}/\text{sec}^2$  (902.2  $\text{ft}/\text{sec}^2$ )

escape velocity: 618.02 km/sec (384.01 mi/sec)

mean temperature at visible surface: 5,527 °C (9,980 °F)

Mercury

average distance from the Sun: 58 million km (36 million mi)
 diameter (at equator): 4,879 km (3,032 mi)
 mass (in  $10^{20}$  kg): 3,300
 density (mass/volume, in  $\text{kg/m}^3$ ): 5,427
 eccentricity of orbit: 0.206
 mean orbital velocity: 47.9 km/sec (29.7 mi/sec)
 inclination of orbit to ecliptic:  $7.0^\circ$
 orbital period: 88 Earth days
 rotation period: 58.6 Earth days inclination of equator to orbit: probably  $0^\circ$ gravitational acceleration:  $3.7 \text{ m/sec}^2$  ( $12.1 \text{ ft/sec}^2$ )
 escape velocity: 4.3 km/sec (2.7 mi/sec)
 mean temperature at surface†:  $167^\circ\text{C}$  ( $333^\circ\text{F}$ ) satellites: none known probes and space missions: US—Mariner 10, 1973; Messenger, 2004.

Venus

average distance from the Sun: 108.2 million km (67.2 million mi)
 diameter (at equator): 12,104 km (7,521 mi)
 mass (in  $10^{20}$  kg): 48,700
 density (mass/volume, in  $\text{kg/m}^3$ ): 5,243
 eccentricity of orbit: 0.007
 mean orbital velocity: 35.0 km/sec (21.8 mi/sec)
 inclination of orbit to ecliptic:  $3.4^\circ$
 orbital period: 224.7 Earth days rotation period: 243.0 Earth days (retrograde) inclination of equator to orbit:  $177.4^\circ$
 gravitational acceleration:  $8.9 \text{ m/sec}^2$  ( $29.1 \text{ ft/sec}^2$ )
 escape velocity: 10.4 km/sec (6.4 mi/sec)
 mean temperature at surface†:  $464^\circ\text{C}$  ( $867^\circ\text{F}$ )
 satellites: none known probes and space missions: USSR—Venera 1–16, 1961–83; Vega 1 and 2, 1984; US—Mariner 2, 5, and 10, 1962, 1967, and 1973; Pioneer Venus Orbiter and Pioneer Venus Multiprobe, 1978; Galileo, 1989; Magellan, 1989; ESA—Venus Express, 2005.

Earth

average distance from the Sun: 149.6 million km (93 million mi)
 diameter (at equator): 12,756 km (7,926 mi)
 mass (in  $10^{20}$  kg): 59,700
 density (mass/volume, in  $\text{kg/m}^3$ ): 5,515
 eccentricity of orbit: 0.017
 mean orbital velocity: 29.8 km/sec (18.5 mi/sec)
 inclination of orbit to ecliptic:  $0.00^\circ$ orbital period: 365.25 days rotation period: 23 hours, 56 minutes, and 4 seconds of mean solar time inclination of equator to orbit:  $23.5^\circ$
 gravitational acceleration:  $9.8 \text{ m/sec}^2$  ( $32.1 \text{ ft/sec}^2$ )
 escape velocity: 11.2 km/sec (7.0 mi/sec)
 mean temperature at surface†:  $15^\circ\text{C}$  ( $59^\circ\text{F}$ ) satellites: 1 known—the Moon.

Moon (of Earth)

average distance from Earth: 384,401 km (238,855.7 mi)
 diameter (at equator): 3,475 km (2,159 mi)
 mass (in  $10^{20}$  kg): 730
 density (mass/volume, in  $\text{kg/m}^3$ ): 3,340
 eccentricity of orbit: orbital eccentricity of Moon around Earth is 0.055 mean orbital velocity: the Moon orbits Earth at 1.0 km/sec (0.64 mi/sec)

inclination of orbit to ecliptic:  $5.1^\circ$

orbital period: the Moon revolves around Earth in 27.32 Earth days rotation period: the Moon rotates on its axis every 27.32 Earth days (synchronous with orbital period)

inclination of equator to orbit:  $6.7^\circ$

gravitational acceleration:  $1.6 \text{ m/sec}^2$  ( $5.3 \text{ ft/sec}^2$ )

escape velocity: 2.4 km/sec (1.5 mi/sec)

mean temperature at surface†: daytime:  $107^\circ\text{C}$  ( $224.6^\circ\text{F}$ ); nighttime:  $-153^\circ\text{C}$  ( $-243.4^\circ\text{F}$ ) probes and space missions: USSR, US, ESA, Japan—collectively about 70 missions since 1959, including 9 manned missions by the US. On 20 Jul 1969 humans first set foot on the Moon, from NASA's Apollo 11.

Mars

average distance from the Sun: 227.9 million km (141.6 million mi)
 diameter (at equator): 6,794 km (4,222 mi)
 mass (in  $10^{20}$  kg): 6,420
 density (mass/volume, in  $\text{kg/m}^3$ ): 3,933
 eccentricity of orbit: 0.094
 mean orbital velocity: 24.1 km/sec (15 mi/sec)
 inclination of orbit to ecliptic:  $1.9^\circ$ orbital period: 687 Earth days (1.88 Earth years) rotation period: 24.6 Earth hours
 inclination of equator to orbit:  $24.9^\circ$
 gravitational acceleration:  $3.7 \text{ m/sec}^2$  ( $12.1 \text{ ft/sec}^2$ )
 escape velocity: 5.0 km/sec (3.1 mi/sec)
 mean temperature at surface†:  $-65^\circ\text{C}$  ( $-85^\circ\text{F}$ )
 satellites: 2 known—Phobos and Deimos probes and space missions: US—Mariner 4, 6, 7, and 9, 1964–71; Viking 1 and 2, 1975; Mars Global Surveyor, 1996; Mars Pathfinder, 1996; 2001 Mars Odyssey, 2001; Mars Exploration Rovers, 2003; Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter, 2005; USSR—Mars 2–7, 1971–73; Phobos 1 and 2, 1988; ESA—Mars Express, 2003; Phoenix, 2007.

Jupiter

average distance from the Sun: 778.6 million km (483.8 million mi)
 diameter (at equator): 142,984 km (88,846 mi)
 mass (in  $10^{20}$  kg): 18.99 million
 density (mass/volume, in  $\text{kg/m}^3$ ): 1,326
 eccentricity of orbit: 0.049
 mean orbital velocity: 13.1 km/sec (8.1 mi/sec)
 inclination of orbit to ecliptic:  $1.3^\circ$
 orbital period: 11.86 Earth years
 rotation period: 9.9 Earth hours
 inclination of equator to orbit:  $3.1^\circ$
 gravitational acceleration:  $23.1 \text{ m/sec}^2$  ( $75.9 \text{ ft/sec}^2$ )
 escape velocity: 59.5 km/sec (37.0 mi/sec)
 mean temperature at surface†:  $-110^\circ\text{C}$  ( $-166^\circ\text{F}$ ) satellites: at least 62 moons—including Callisto, Ganymede, Europa, and Io—plus rings probes and space missions: US—Pioneer 10 and 11, 1972–73; Voyager 1 and 2, 1977; Galileo, 1989; Ulysses, 1990; US/ESA—Cassini-Huygens, 1997.

Saturn

average distance from the Sun: 1.433 billion km (890.8 million mi)
 diameter (at equator): 120,536 km (74,897 mi)
 mass (in  $10^{20}$  kg): 5.68 million
 density (mass/volume, in  $\text{kg/m}^3$ ): 687

Characteristics of Celestial Bodies (continued)

mean orbital velocity: 9.7 km/sec (6 mi/sec)
 inclination of orbit to ecliptic: 2.5°
 orbital period: 29.43 Earth years
 rotation period: 10.66 Earth hours
 inclination of equator to orbit: 26.7° gravitational acceleration: 9.0 m/sec<sup>2</sup> (29.4 ft/sec<sup>2</sup>)
 escape velocity: 35.5 km/sec (22.1 mi/sec)
 mean temperature at surface†: -140 °C (-220 °F) satellites: at least 61 moons—including Titan—plus rings probes and space missions: US—Pioneer 11, 1973; Voyager 1 and 2, 1977; US/ESA—Cassini/Huygens, 1997.

Uranus

average distance from the Sun: 2.872 billion km (1.784 billion miles)
 diameter (at equator): 51,118 km (31,763 mi)
 mass (in 10<sup>20</sup> kg): 868,000
 density (mass/volume, in kg/m<sup>3</sup>): 1.270
 eccentricity of orbit: 0.046
 mean orbital velocity: 6.8 km/sec (4.2 mi/sec)
 inclination of orbit to ecliptic: 0.8°
 orbital period: 84.01 Earth years rotation period: 17.2 Earth hours (retrograde) inclination of equator to orbit: 97.8°
 gravitational acceleration: 8.7 m/sec<sup>2</sup> (28.5 ft/sec<sup>2</sup>)
 escape velocity: 21.3 km/sec (13.2 mi/sec)
 mean temperature at surface†: -195 °C (-320 °F)
 satellites: at least 27 moons, plus rings probes and space missions: US—Voyager 2, 1977.

Neptune

average distance from the Sun: 4.495 billion km (2.793 billion mi)
 diameter (at equator): 49,528 km (30,775 mi)
 mass (in 10<sup>20</sup> kg): 1.02 million density (mass/volume, in kg/m<sup>3</sup>): 1,638
 eccentricity of orbit: 0.009
 mean orbital velocity: 5.48 km/sec (3.40 mi/sec)
 inclination of orbit to ecliptic: 1.8°
 orbital period: 164.79 Earth years
 rotation period: 16.1 Earth hours
 inclination of equator to orbit: 28.3°
 gravitational acceleration: 11.0 m/sec<sup>2</sup> (36.0 ft/sec<sup>2</sup>)
 escape velocity: 23.5 km/sec (14.6 mi/sec)
 mean temperature at surface†: -200 °C (-330 °F)
 satellites: at least 13 moons, plus rings probes and space missions: US—Voyager 2, 1977.

Pluto

average distance from the Sun: 5.910 billion km (3.67 billion mi); Pluto lies within the Kuiper belt and can be considered its largest known member
 diameter (at equator): 2,344 km (1,485 mi)
 mass (in 10<sup>20</sup> kg): 125 density (mass/volume, in kg/m<sup>3</sup>): about 2,000
 eccentricity of orbit: 0.249
 mean orbital velocity: 4.72 km/sec (2.93 mi/sec)
 inclination of orbit to ecliptic: 17.2°
 orbital period: 248 Earth years
 rotation period: 6.4 Earth days (retrograde)
 inclination of equator to orbit: 122.5°
 gravitational acceleration: 0.6 m/sec<sup>2</sup> (1.9 ft/sec<sup>2</sup>)
 escape velocity: 1.1 km/sec (0.7 mi/sec)

mean temperature at surface†: -225 °C (-375 °F)
 satellites: 3 known—including Charon probes and space missions: US—New Horizons, 2006.

asteroids

(several hundred thousand small rocky bodies, about 1,000 km [610 mi] or less in diameter, that orbit the Sun primarily between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter) distance from the Sun: between approximately 300 million km (190 million mi) and 600 million km (380 million mi), with notable outliers estimated mass (in 10<sup>21</sup> kg): 2.3

distance from the Sun at closest point of orbit: 136 million km (84.5 million mi); farthest distance from the Sun: 74.7 billion km (46.4 billion mi).
 eccentricity of orbit: 0.995
 orbital period: 4,000 Earth years; last closest pass of Sun was on 31 Mar 1997.

Kuiper belt

(a huge flat ring located beyond Neptune containing residual icy material from the formation of the outer planets) average distance from the Sun (main concentration): 4.5–7.5 billion km (2.8–4.7 billion mi) mass: scientists estimate there may be as many as 100,000 icy, cometlike bodies of a size greater than 100 km in the Kuiper belt; the belt is estimated to have a mass of 6,000 x 10<sup>20</sup> kg.
 probes and space missions: US—New Horizons, 2006.

Oort cloud

(an immense, roughly spherical cloud of icy, cometlike bodies inferred to orbit the Sun at distances roughly 1,000 times that of the orbit of Pluto) average distance from the Sun: 3–7 trillion km (1.9–4.3 trillion mi) mass: some trillions of the cloud's icy objects have an estimated total mass of at least 600,000 x 10<sup>20</sup> kg (10 times the mass of Earth).

†For celestial bodies with no surface, temperature given is at a level in the atmosphere equal to 1 bar of pressure.

Solar System Superlatives

Largest planet: Jupiter (142,984 km [88,846 mi] diameter); all of the other planets in the solar system could fit inside Jupiter.

Largest moon: Jupiter's moon Ganymede (5,268 km [3,273 mi] diameter).

Smallest planet: Mercury (4,879 km [3,032 mi] diameter).

Smallest moons: Saturn and Jupiter both have numerous satellites that are smaller than 10 km (6 mi) in diameter.

Planet closest to the Sun: Mercury (average distance from the Sun 58 million km [36 million mi]).

Planet farthest from the Sun: Neptune (average distance from the Sun 4.50 billion km [2.79 billion mi]); Pluto, demoted to the status of dwarf planet in 2006, was the farthest planet from the Sun for all but 20 years of its 248-year orbital period.

Planet with the most eccentric (least circular) orbit: Mercury (eccentricity of 0.206).

Moon with the most eccentric orbit: Neptune's moon Nereid (eccentricity of 0.75).

Planet with the least eccentric orbit: Venus (eccentricity of 0.007).

Moon with the least eccentric orbit: Saturn's moon Tethys (eccentricity of 0.0001).

Planet most tilted on its axis: Uranus (axial tilt of 98° from its orbital plane).

Planet with the most moons: Jupiter (at least 62).

Planets with the fewest moons: Mercury and Venus (none).

Planet with the longest day: Venus (1 day on Venus equals 243 Earth days).

Planet with the shortest day: Jupiter (1 day on Jupiter equals 9.9 Earth hours).

Planet with the longest year: Neptune (1 year on Neptune equals 165 Earth years).

Planet with the shortest year: Mercury (1 year on Mercury equals 88 Earth days).

Fastest orbiting planet: Mercury (47.9 km/sec [29.7 mi/sec] mean orbital velocity).

Slowest orbiting planet: Neptune (5.48 km/sec [3.40 mi/sec] mean orbital velocity).

Hottest planet: Venus (464 °C [867 °F] average temperature); although Mercury is closer to the Sun, Venus is hotter because Mercury has no atmosphere, whereas the atmosphere of Venus traps heat via a strong greenhouse effect.

Coldest planet: Neptune (−220 °C [−364 °F] average temperature).

Brightest visible star in the night sky: Sirius (apparent visual magnitude −1.46).

Brightest planet in the night sky: Venus (apparent visual magnitude −4.5 to −3.77).

Densest planet: Earth (density of 5,515 kg/m³).

Least dense planet: Saturn (density of 687 kg/m³); Saturn in theory would float in water.

Planet with strongest gravity: Jupiter (more than twice the gravitational force of Earth at an altitude at which one bar of atmospheric pressure is exerted).

Planet with weakest gravity: Mars (slightly more than one-third the gravitational force of Earth).

Planet with the largest mountain: Mars (Olympus Mons, an extinct volcano, stands some 21 km [13 mi] above the planet's mean radius and 540 km [335 mi] across).

Planet with the deepest valley: Mars (Valles Marineris, a system of canyons, is some 4,000 km [2,500 mi] long and from about 2 to 9 km [1 to 5.6 mi] deep).

Largest known impact crater: Valhalla, a crater on Jupiter's moon Callisto, has a bright central area that is about 600 km (370 mi) across, with concentric ridges extending about 1,500 km (900 mi) from the center. (The largest crater on Earth believed to be of impact origin is the Vredefort ring structure in South Africa, which is about 300 km [190 mi] across.)

The Sun

The Sun is the star around which the Earth and the other components of the solar system revolve. It is the dominant body of the system, constituting more than 99% of the system's entire mass. The Sun is the source of an enormous amount of energy, a portion of which provides the Earth with the light and heat necessary to support life. The geologic record of the Earth and Moon reveals that the Sun was formed about 4.5 billion years ago. The energy radiated by the Sun is produced during the conversion of hydrogen atoms to helium. The Sun is at least 90% hydrogen by number of atoms, so the fuel is readily available.

The Sun is classified as a G2 V star, where G2 stands for the second hottest stars of the yellow G class—of surface temperature about 5,500 °C (10,000 °F)—and V represents a main sequence, or dwarf, star, the typical star for this temperature class (see also “Classification of Stars”). The Sun exists in the outer part of the Milky Way Galaxy and was formed from material that had been processed inside other stars and supernovas.

The mass of the Sun is 743 times the total mass of all the planets in the solar system and 330,000 times that of the Earth. All the interesting planetary and interplanetary gravitational phenomena are negligible effects in comparison to the gravitational force exerted by the Sun. Under the force of gravity, the great mass of the Sun presses inward, and to keep the star from collapsing, the central pressure outward must be great enough to support its weight. The Sun's core, which occupies approximately 25% of the star's radius, has a density about 100 times that of water (roughly 6 times that at the center of the Earth), but the temperature at the core is at least 15 million °C (27 million °F), so the central pressure is at least 10,000 times greater than that at the center of the Earth. In this environment atoms are completely stripped of their electrons, and at this high temperature the bare nuclei collide to produce the nuclear reactions that are responsible for generating the energy vital to life on Earth.

The temperature of the Sun's surface is so high that no solid or liquid can exist; the constituent materials are predominantly gaseous atoms, with a very small number of molecules. As a result, there is no fixed surface. The surface viewed from Earth, the photosphere, is approximately 400 km (250 mi) thick and is the layer from which most of the radiation reaches us; the radiation from below the photosphere is absorbed and reradiated, while the emission from overlying layers drops sharply, by about a factor of six every 200 km (124 mi).

While the temperature of the Sun drops from 15 million °C (27 million °F) at the core to around 5,500 °C (10,000 °F) at the photosphere, a surprising reversal occurs above that point; the temperature begins to rise in the chromosphere, a layer several thousand kilometers thick. Temperatures there range from 4,200 °C (7,600 °F) to 100,000 °C (180,000 °F). Above the chromosphere is a comparatively dim, extended halo called the corona, which has a temperature of 1 million °C (1.8 million °F) and reaches far past the planets. Beyond a distance of around 3.5 million km (2.2 million mi) from the Sun, the corona flows outward at a speed (near the Earth) of 400 km/sec (250 mi/sec); this flow of charged particles is called the solar wind.

The Sun is a very stable source of energy. Superposed on this stability, however, is an interesting 11-year cycle of magnetic activity manifested by regions of transient strong magnetic fields called sunspots. The largest sunspots can be seen on the solar surface even without a telescope.

Mercury

Mercury is the planet closest to the Sun, revolving around it at an average distance of 58 million km (36 million mi). In Sumerian times, some 5,000 years ago, it was already known in the night sky. In classical Greece the planet was called Apollo when it appeared as a morning star and Hermes, for the Greek equivalent of the Roman god Mercury, when it appeared as an evening star.

Mercury's orbit lies inside the orbit of the Earth and is more elliptical than those of most of the other planets. At its closest approach (perihelion), Mercury is only 46 million km (28.5 million mi) from the Sun, while its greatest distance (aphelion) approaches 70 million km (43.5 million mi). Mercury orbits the Sun in 88 Earth days at an average speed of 48 km per second (29.8 mi per sec), allowing it to overtake and pass Earth every 116 Earth days (synodic period).

Because of its proximity to the Sun, the surface of Mercury can become extremely hot. High temperatures at "noon" may reach 400 °C (755 °F) while the "predawn" lowest temperature is -173 °C (-280 °F). Mercury's equator is almost exactly in its orbital plane (its spin-axis inclination is nearly zero), and thus Mercury does not have seasons as does the Earth. Because of its elliptical orbit and a peculiarity of its rotational period (see below), however, certain longitudes experience cyclical variations in temperatures on a "yearly" as well as on a "diurnal" basis.

Mercury is about 4,879 km (3,032 mi) in diameter, the smallest of the planets. Mercury is only a bit larger than the Moon. Its mass, as measured by the gravitational perturbation of the path of the Mariner 10 spacecraft during close flybys in 1974-75, is about one-eighteenth of the mass of the Earth. Escape velocity, the speed needed to escape from a planet's gravitational field, is about 4.3 km per second (2.7 mi per second)—compared with 11.2 km per sec (7 mi per sec) for the Earth.

The mean density of Mercury, calculated from its mass and radius, is about 5.43 grams per cubic cm, nearly the same as that of the Earth (5.52 grams per cubic cm).

Photographs relayed by the Mariner 10 spacecraft showed that Mercury spins on its axis (rotates) once every 58.646 Earth days, exactly two-thirds of the orbital period of 87.9694 Earth days. This observation confirmed that Mercury is in a 3:2 spin-orbit tidal resonance—i.e., that tides raised on Mercury by the Sun have forced it into a condition that causes it to rotate three times on its axis in the same time it takes to revolve around the Sun twice. The 3:2 spin-orbit coupling combines with Mercury's eccentric orbit to create very unusual temperature effects.

Although Mercury rotates on its axis once every 58.646 Earth days, one rotation does not bring the Sun back to the same part of the sky, because during that time Mercury has moved partway around the Sun. A solar day on Mercury (for example, from one sunrise to another, or one noon to another) is 176 Earth days (exactly two Mercurian years).

Mercury's low escape velocity and high surface temperatures do not permit it to retain a significant atmosphere.

In January 2008 the MESSENGER spacecraft flew by Mercury, revealing previously unseen details in photographs, and scientists approved dozens of new names for surface features such as craters.

Venus

Venus is the second planet from the Sun and the planet whose orbit is closest to that of the Earth. When visible, Venus is the brightest planet in the sky. Viewed through a telescope, it presents a brilliant, yellow-white, essentially featureless face to the observer. The obscured appearance results because the surface of the planet is hidden from sight by a continuous and permanent cover of clouds.

Venus's orbit is the most nearly circular of that of any planet, with a deviation from perfect circularity of only about 1 part in 150. The period of the orbit—that is, the length of the Venusian year—is 224.7 Earth days. The rotation of Venus is unusual in both its direction and speed. Most of the planets in the solar system rotate in a counterclockwise direction when viewed from above their north poles; Venus, however, rotates in the opposite, or retrograde, direction. Were it not for the planet's clouds, an observer on Venus's surface would see the Sun rise in the west and set in the east.

Venus spins on its axis slowly, taking 243 Earth days to complete one rotation. Venus's spin and orbital periods are nearly synchronized with the Earth's orbit such that Venus presents almost the same face toward the Earth when the two planets are at their closest.

Venus is nearly the Earth's twin in terms of size and mass. Venus's equatorial diameter is about 95% of the Earth's diameter, while its mass is 81.5% that of the Earth. The similarities to the Earth in size and mass also produce a similarity in density; Venus's density is 5.24 grams per cubic cm, as compared with 5.52 for the Earth.

Venus (continued)

In terms of its shape, Venus is more nearly a perfect sphere than are most planets. A planet's rotation generally causes a slight flattening at the poles and bulging at the equator, but Venus's very slow rotation rate allows it to maintain its highly spherical shape.

Venus has the most massive atmosphere of all the terrestrial planets (Mercury, Venus, Earth, and Mars). Its atmosphere is composed of 96.5% carbon dioxide and 3.5% nitrogen. The atmospheric pressure at the planet's surface varies with the surface elevation but averages about 90 bars, or 90 times the atmospheric pressure at the Earth's surface. This is the same pressure found at a depth of about one kilometer in the Earth's oceans. Temperatures range between a minimum temperature of  $-45^{\circ}\text{C}$  ( $-49^{\circ}\text{F}$ ) and a maximum temperature of  $500^{\circ}\text{C}$  ( $932^{\circ}\text{F}$ ); the average temperature is  $464^{\circ}\text{C}$  ( $867^{\circ}\text{F}$ ).

Earth

Earth is the third planet in distance outward from the Sun. It is the only planetary body in the solar system that has conditions suitable for life, at least as known to modern science.

The average distance of Earth from the Sun—149.6 million km (93 million mi)—is designated as the distance of the unit of measurement known as the AU (astronomical unit). Earth orbits the Sun at a speed of 29.8 km (18.5 mi) per second, making one complete revolution in 365.25 days. As it revolves around the Sun, Earth spins on its axis and rotates completely once every 23 hr 56 min 4 sec. Earth has a single natural satellite, the Moon.

The fifth largest planet of the solar system, Earth has a total surface area of roughly 509.6 million sq km (197 million sq mi), of which about 29%, or 148 million square km (57 million square mi), is land. Oceans and smaller seas cover the balance of the surface. Earth is the only planet known to have liquid water. Together with ice, the liquid water constitutes the hydrosphere. Seawater makes up more than 98% of the total mass of the hydrosphere and covers about 71% of Earth's surface. Significantly, seawater constituted the environment of the earliest terrestrial life forms.

Earth's atmosphere consists of a mixture of gases, chiefly nitrogen (78%) and oxygen (21%). Argon makes up much of the remainder of the gaseous envelope, with trace amounts of water vapor, carbon dioxide, and various other gases also present.

Earth's structure consists of an inner core of nearly solid iron, surrounded by successive layers of molten metals and solid rock, and a thin layer at the surface comprising the continental crust.

Earth is surrounded by a magnetosphere, a region dominated by Earth's magnetic field and extending upward from about 140 km (90 mi) in the upper atmosphere. In the magnetosphere, the magnetic field of Earth traps rapidly moving charged particles (mainly electrons and protons), the majority of which flow from the Sun (as solar wind). If it were not for this shielding effect, such particles would bombard the terrestrial surface and destroy life. High concentrations of the trapped particles make up two doughnut-shaped zones called the Van Allen radiation belts. These belts play a key role in certain geophysical phenomena, such as auroras.

The Moon

The Moon is the sole natural satellite of the Earth. It revolves around the planet from west to east at a mean distance of about 384,400 km (238,900 mi). The Moon is less than one-third the size of the Earth, having a diameter of only about 3,475 km (2,159 mi) at its equator. The Moon shines by reflecting sunlight, but its albedo—i.e., the fraction of light received that is reflected—is only 0.073.

The Moon rotates about its own axis in about 27.32 days, which is virtually identical to the time it takes to complete its orbit around the Earth. As a result, the Moon always presents nearly the same face to the Earth. The rate of actual rotation is uniform, but the arc through which the Moon moves from day to day varies somewhat, causing the lunar globe (as seen by a terrestrial observer) to oscillate slightly over a period nearly equal to that of revolution.

The surface of the Moon has been a subject of continuous telescopic study from the time of Galileo's first observation in 1609. The Italian Jesuit astronomer Giovanni B. Riccioli designated the dark areas on the Moon as seas (maria), with such fanciful names as Mare Imbrium ("Sea of Showers") and Mare Nectaris ("Sea of Nectar"). This nomenclature continues to be used even though it is now known that the Moon is completely devoid of surface water. During the centuries that followed the publication of these early studies, more detailed maps and, eventually, photographs were produced. A Soviet space probe photographed the side of the Moon facing away from the Earth in 1959. By the late 1960s the US Lunar Orbiter missions had yielded close-up photographs of the entire lunar surface. On 20 Jul 1969, Apollo 11 astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin ("Buzz") Aldrin set foot on the Moon.

The most striking formations on the Moon are its craters. These features, which measure up to about 200 km (320 mi) or more in diameter, are scattered over the surface in great profusion and often overlap one another. Meteorites hitting the lunar surface at high velocity produced most of the large craters. Many of the smaller ones—those measuring less than 1 km (0.6 mi) across—appear to have been formed by explosive volcanic activity, however. The Moon's maria have relatively few craters. These lava outpourings spread over vast areas after most of the craters had already been formed.

Various theories for the Moon's origin have been proposed. At the end of the 19th century, the English astronomer Sir George H. Darwin advanced a hypothesis stating that the Moon had been originally part of the Earth but had broken away as a result of tidal gravitational action and receded from the planet. This was proved unlikely in the 1930s. A theory that arose during the 1950s postulated that the Moon had formed elsewhere in the solar system and was then later captured by the Earth. This idea was also proved to be physically implausible and was dismissed. Today, most investigators favor an explanation known as the giant-impact hypothesis, which postulates that a Mars-sized body struck the proto-Earth early in the history of the solar system. As a result, a cloud of fragments from both bodies was ejected into orbit around the Earth, and this later accreted into the Moon.

Moon Phases, 2009–2010

As the Moon orbits Earth, more or less of the half of the Moon illuminated by the Sun is visible on Earth. During the lunar month the Moon's appearance changes from dark (the new moon) to being illuminated more and more on the right side (waxing crescent, first quarter, and waxing gibbous) to the full disc being illuminated (the full moon). The phases of the Moon are completed by the Moon being illuminated less and less on the left side (waning gibbous, last quarter, and waning crescent) and end with another new moon. This cycle takes place over a period of around 29 days; the time from new moon to new moon is referred to as a lunation.

The phases of the Moon are caused by the positions of the Sun in relationship to the Moon. Thus, when the Sun and the Moon are close in the sky a dark new moon is the result (the Sun is lighting the half of the Moon not visible to Earth). When the Sun and the Moon are at opposition (in opposite parts of the sky) the full moon occurs (the Sun illuminates fully the half of the Moon seen on Earth). When the Sun and the Moon are at about a 90-degree angle, one sees either a first quarter or a last quarter moon.

The dates for the new moon, first quarter, full moon, and last quarter for late May 2009–December 2010 are given in the table below.

Mars

Mars is the fourth planet in order of average distance from the Sun and the seventh in order of diminishing size and mass. It orbits the Sun once in 687 Earth days and spins on its axis once every 24 Earth hours and 37 minutes.

Because of its blood-red color, Mars has often been associated with warfare and slaughter. It is named for the Roman god of war; as far back as 3,000 years ago, Babylonian astronomer-astrologers called the planet Nergal for their god of death and pestilence. The Greeks called it Ares for their god of battle; the planet's two satellites, Phobos (Fear) and Deimos (Terror), were later named for the two sons of Ares and Aphrodite.

Mars moves around the Sun at a mean distance of approximately 1.52 times that of Earth from the Sun. Because the orbit of Mars is relatively elongated, the distance between Mars and the Sun varies from 206.6 to 249.2 million km (128.4 to 154.8 million mi). Mars completes a single orbit in roughly the time in which Earth completes two. At its closest approach, Mars is less than 56 million km (34.8 million mi) from Earth, but it recedes to almost 400 million km (248.5 million mi). Mars is a small planet. Its equatorial radius is about half that of Earth, and its mass is only one-tenth the terrestrial value.

The axis of rotation is inclined to the orbital plane at an angle of 24.9°, and, as on Earth, the tilt gives rise to seasons. The Martian year consists of 668.6 Martian solar days (called sols). The orientation and eccentricity of the orbit (eccentricity denotes how much the orbit deviates from a perfect circle: the more elongated, the more eccentric) leads to seasons that are quite uneven in length. The Martian atmosphere is mainly composed of carbon dioxide. It is very thin (less than 1% of Earth's atmospheric pressure). Evidence suggests that the atmosphere was much denser in the remote past and that water was once much more abundant at the surface. Only small amounts of water are found in the lower atmosphere today, occasionally forming thin ice clouds at high altitudes and, in several localities, morning ice fogs. Mars's polar caps consist of frozen carbon dioxide and water ice. Intriguing spacecraft observations confirm that water ice also is present under large areas of the Martian surface and hint that liquid water may have flowed in geologically recent times.

The characteristic temperature in the lower atmosphere is about  $-70^{\circ}\text{C}$  ( $-100^{\circ}\text{F}$ ). Unlike that of Earth, the total mass (and pressure) of the atmosphere experiences large seasonal variations, as carbon dioxide “snows out” at the winter pole.

The surface of Mars shows some of the most dramatic variation in the solar system: the massive extinct volcano Olympus Mons stands some 21 km (13 mi) above the planet’s mean radius and is 540 km (335 mi) across, and Valles Marineris, a system of canyons, is some 4,000 km (2,500 mi) long and from about 2 to 9 km (1 to 5.6 mi) deep.

The two satellites of Mars—Phobos and Deimos—were discovered in 1877 by Asaph Hall of the United States Naval Observatory. Little was known about these bodies until observations were made by NASA’s orbiting Mariner 9 spacecraft nearly a century later. The moons of Mars cannot be seen from all locations on the planet because of their small size, proximity to the planet, and near-equatorial orbits.

Two Mars Exploration Rovers—Spirit and Opportunity—landed on Mars in January 2004. In May 2008 the spacecraft Phoenix successfully landed on the planet and began its mission to be the first spacecraft to retrieve and study water (ice) from another planet. In late July it confirmed the presence of water on Mars. In 2009 the Rovers continued to explore features of the planet, notably stratigraphy and volcanic activity, in their fourth Martian winter.

The speed of steamboats increased dramatically over the years; the run from New Orleans to Louisville KY, which took 25 days in 1816, required only 4 days by 1853. The average life span of a steamboat was only four to five years because of poor construction and maintenance, exploding boilers, and sinkings due to river construction. Spontaneous races were common and contributed greatly to the approximately 4,000 deaths in steamboat disasters between 1810 and 1850.

Jupiter

Jupiter is the most massive of the planets and is fifth in average distance from the Sun. When ancient astronomers named the planet Jupiter for the ruler of the gods in the Greco-Roman pantheon, they had no idea of the planet’s true dimensions, but the name is appropriate, for Jupiter is larger than all the other planets combined. It has a narrow ring system and at least 62 known satellites, 3 larger than Earth’s Moon. Jupiter also has an internal heat source—i.e., it emits more energy than it receives from the Sun. This giant has the strongest magnetic field of any planet, with a magnetosphere so large that, if it could be seen from Earth, its apparent diameter would exceed that of the Moon. Jupiter’s system is the source of intense bursts of radio noise, at some frequencies occasionally radiating more energy than the Sun.

Of particular interest concerning Jupiter’s physical properties is its low mean density of 1.33 grams per cubic cm—in contrast with Earth’s 5.52 grams/cm<sup>3</sup>—coupled with the large dimensions and mass and the short rotational period. The low density and large mass indicate that Jupiter’s composition and structure are quite unlike those of Earth and the other inner planets, a deduction that is supported by detailed investigations of the giant planet’s atmosphere and interior.

Jupiter has no solid surface; the transition from the atmosphere to its highly compressed core occurs gradually at great depths. The close-up views of Jupiter from the Voyager spacecraft revealed a variety of cloud forms, with a predominance of elliptical features reminiscent of cyclonic and anticyclonic storm systems on Earth. All these systems are in motion, appearing and disappearing on time scales dependent on their sizes and locations. Also observed to vary are the pastel shades of various colors present in the cloud layers—from the tawny yellow that seems to characterize the main layer, through browns and blue-grays, to the well-known salmon-colored Great Red Spot, Jupiter’s largest, most prominent, and longest-lived feature.

Because Jupiter has no solid surface, it has no topographic features, and latitudinal currents dominate the planet’s large-scale circulation. The lack of a solid surface with physical boundaries and regions with different heat capacities makes the persistence of these currents and their associated cloud patterns all the more remarkable. The Great Red Spot, for example, moves in longitude with respect to Jupiter’s rotation, but it does not move in latitude.

The Voyager 1 spacecraft verified the existence of a ring system surrounding Jupiter when it crossed the planet’s equatorial plane. Subsequently, images from the Galileo spacecraft revealed that the ring system consists principally of four concentric components whose boundaries are associated with the orbits of Jupiter’s four innermost moons. The ring system is composed of large numbers of micrometer-sized particles that produce strong forward scattering of incident sunlight. The presence of such small particles requires a source, and the association of the ring boundaries with the four moons makes the source clear. The particles are thought to be generated by impacts on these moons (and on still smaller bodies within the main part of the ring) by micrometeoroids, cometary debris, and possibly volcanically produced material from Jupiter’s moon Io.

Jovian Moons

The satellites orbiting Jupiter are numerous; there are at least 62 Jovian moons and likely additional ones to be discovered.

The first objects in the solar system discovered by means of a telescope (by Galileo in 1610) were the four brightest moons of Jupiter. Now known as the Galilean satellites, they are (in order of increasing distance from Jupiter) Io, Europa, Ganymede, and Callisto. Each is a unique world in its own right. Callisto and Ganymede, for example, are as large as or larger than the planet Mercury, but, while Callisto's icy surface is ancient and heavily cratered from impacts, Ganymede's appears to have been extensively modified by internal activity. Europa may still be geologically active and may harbor an ocean of liquid water, and possibly even life, beneath its frozen surface. Io is the most volcanically active body in the solar system; its surface is a vividly colored landscape of erupting vents, pools and solidified flows of lava, and sulfurous deposits.

Data for the first 16 known Jovian moons (discovered 1610–1979) are summarized below. The orbits of the inner eight satellites have low inclinations (they are not tilted relative to the planet's equator) and low eccentricities (their orbits are relatively circular). The orbits of the outer eight have much higher inclinations and eccentricities, and four of them are retrograde (they are opposite to Jupiter's spin and orbital motion around the Sun). The innermost four satellites are thought to be intimately associated with Jupiter's ring and are the sources of the fine particles within the ring itself.

Beginning in 1999 some 47 tiny moons (including one seen in 1975 and then lost) were discovered photographically in observations from Earth. All have high orbital eccentricities and inclinations and large orbital radii; nearly all of the orbits are retrograde. Rough size estimates based on their brightness place them between 2 and 8 km (1.2 and 5 mi) in diameter. They were assigned provisional numerical designations on discovery; many also have received official names.

In the table, "sync" denotes that the orbital period and rotational period are the same, or synchronous; hence, the moon always keeps the same face toward Jupiter. "R" following the orbital period indicates a retrograde orbit. Unspecified quantities are unknown.

Jovian Ring

Jupiter's complex ring was discovered and first studied by the twin Voyager spacecraft during their flybys of the giant planet in 1979. It is now known to consist of four main components: an outer gossamer ring, whose outer radius coincides with the orbital radius of the Jovian moon Thebe (222,000 km; 138,000 mi); an inner gossamer ring bounded on its outer edge by the orbit of Amalthea (181,000 km; 112,500 mi); the main ring, extending inward some 6,000 km (3,700 mi) from the orbits of Adrastea (129,000 km; 80,000 mi) and Metis (128,000 km; 79,500 mi); and a halo of particles with a thickness of 25,000 km (15,500 mi) that extends from the main ring inward to a radius of about 95,000 km (59,000 mi). For comparison, Jupiter's visible surface lies at a radius of about 71,500 km (44,400 mi) from its center. The four moons involved with the ring are believed to supply the fine particles that compose it.

Saturn

Saturn is the sixth planet in order of average distance from the Sun and the second largest of the planets in mass and size. Its dimensions are almost equal to those of Jupiter, while its mass is about a third as large; it has the lowest mean density of any object in the solar system.

Both Saturn and Jupiter resemble stellar bodies in that the light gas hydrogen dominates their bulk chemical composition. Saturn's atmosphere is 91% hydrogen by mass and is thus the most hydrogen-rich atmosphere in the solar system. Saturn's structure and evolutionary history, however, differ significantly from those of its larger counterpart. Like the other giant planets—Jupiter, Uranus, and Neptune—Saturn has extensive satellite and ring systems, which may provide clues to its origin and evolution. The planet has at least 61 moons, including the second largest in the solar system. Saturn's dense and extended rings, which lie in its equatorial plane, are the most impressive in the solar system.

Saturn has no single rotation period. Cloud motions in its massive upper atmosphere can be used to trace out a variety of rotation periods, with periods as short as about 10 hours 10 minutes near the equator and increasing with some oscillation to about 30 minutes longer at latitudes higher than 40°. The rotation period of Saturn's deep interior can be determined from the rotation period of the magnetic field, which is presumed to be rooted in an outer core of hydrogen compressed to a metallic state. The "surface" of Saturn that is seen through telescopes and in spacecraft images is actually a complex layer of clouds.

The atmosphere of Saturn shows many smaller-scale time-variable features similar to those found in that of Jupiter, such as red, brown, and white spots; bands; eddies; and vortices. The atmosphere generally has a much blander appearance than Jupiter's, however, and is less active on a small scale. A spectacular exception occurred during September–November 1990, when a large white spot appeared near the equator, expanded to a size exceeding 20,000 km (12,400 mi), and eventually spread around the equator before fading.

Saturnian Moons

At least 61 natural satellites are known to circle Saturn. Data for the first 18 Saturnian moons (discovered 1655–1990) are summarized below. As with those of the other giant planets, the satellites closest to Saturn are mostly regular, meaning that their orbits are fairly circular and not greatly inclined (tilted) with respect to the planet's equator. All of the satellites in the table except distant Phoebe are regular.

Titan is Saturn's largest moon and the only satellite in the solar system known to have clouds and a dense atmosphere (composed mostly of nitrogen and methane). The moon is also enveloped in a reddish haze, which is thought to be composed of complex organic compounds that are produced by the action of sunlight on its clouds and atmosphere. That organic molecules may have been settling out of the haze onto Titan's surface for much of its history has encouraged some scientists to speculate on the possibility that life may have evolved there. Observations by the Cassini-Huygens spacecraft showed Titan to have a varied surface sculpted by rains of hydrocarbon compounds, flowing liquids, wind, impacts, and possibly volcanic and tectonic activity. Saturn's second largest moon is Rhea, followed by Iapetus and Dione.

An unusual Saturnian satellite is Hyperion. Because of its highly irregular shape and eccentric orbit, it does not rotate stably about a fixed axis. Unlike any other known object in the solar system, Hyperion rotates chaotically, alternating unpredictably between periods of tumbling and seemingly regular rotation.

Between 2000 and 2005 about 30 additional tiny moons occupying various (mostly distant) orbits were discovered. Like the numerous outer moons of Jupiter, nearly all of the recent finds around Saturn belong to the irregular class, meaning that their orbits are highly inclined and elliptical. More than half of them, plus Phoebe, are in retrograde orbits (they move opposite to Saturn's spin and orbital motion around the Sun).

In March 2008 it was announced that the Cassini spacecraft had taken images of Rhea in 2005 that appeared to show the first known ring around a moon.

In the table, "sync" denotes that the orbital period and rotational period are the same, or synchronous. Unspecified quantities are unknown.

Saturnian Rings

Saturn's rings rank among the most spectacular phenomena in the solar system. They have intrigued astronomers ever since they were discovered telescopically by Galileo in 1610, and their mysteries have only deepened since they were photographed and studied by Voyager 1 and 2 in the early 1980s. The particles that make up the rings are composed primarily of water ice and range from dust specks to car- and house-sized chunks. The rings exhibit a great amount of structure on many scales, from the broad A, B, and C rings visible from Earth down to myriad narrow component ringlets. Odd structures resembling spokes, braids, and spiral waves are also present. Some of this detail is explained by gravitational interaction with a number of Saturn's 61 moons (the orbits of well more than a dozen known moons, from Pan to Dione and Helene, lie within the rings), but much of it remains unaccounted for. Numerous divisions or gaps are seen in the major ring regions. A few of the more prominent ones are named for famous astronomers who were associated with studies of Saturn. The major rings and divisions, listed outward from Saturn, are given below. For comparison, Saturn's visible surface lies at a radius of about 60,300 km (37,500 mi).

Uranus

Uranus is the seventh planet in order of distance from the Sun and the first found with the aid of a telescope. Its low density and large size place it among the four giant planets, all of which are composed primarily of hydrogen, helium, water, and other volatile compounds and which thus are without solid surfaces. Absorption of red light by methane gas gives the planet a blue-green color. The planet has at least 27 satellites, ranging up to 789 km (490 mi) in radius, and 13 narrow rings.

Uranus spins on its side; its rotation axis is tipped at an angle of 98° relative to its orbit axis. The 98° tilt is thought to have arisen during the final stages of planetary accretion when bodies comparable in size to the present planets collided in a series of violent events that knocked Uranus onto its side.

Although Uranus is nearly featureless, extreme contrast enhancement of images taken by the Voyager spacecraft reveals faint bands oriented parallel to circles of constant latitude. Apparently the rotation of the planet and not the distribution of absorbed sunlight controls the cloud patterns.

Wind is the motion of the atmosphere relative to the rotating planet. At high latitudes on Uranus, as on the Earth, this relative motion is in the direction of the planet's rotation. At low (that is, equatorial) latitudes, the relative motion is in the opposite direction. On the Earth these directions are called east and west, respectively, but the more general terms are prograde and retrograde. The winds that exist on Uranus are several times stronger than are those of the Earth. The wind is 200 m (656 ft) per second (prograde) at a latitude of 55° S and 110 m (360.8 ft) per second (retrograde) at the equator. Neptune's equatorial winds are also retrograde, although those of Jupiter and Saturn are prograde. No satisfactory theory exists to explain these differences.

Uranus has no large spots like the Great Red Spot of Jupiter or the Great Dark Spot of Neptune. Since the giant planets have no solid surfaces, the spots represent atmospheric storms. For reasons that are not clear, Uranus seems to have the smallest number of storms of any of the giant planets. Most of the mass of Uranus (roughly 80%) is in the form of a liquid core made primarily of icy materials (water, methane, and ammonia).

Uranus was discovered in 1781 by the English astronomer William Herschel, who had undertaken a survey of all stars down to eighth magnitude—i.e., those about five times fainter than stars visible to the naked eye. Herschel suggested naming the new planet the Georgian Planet after his patron, King George III of England, but the planet was eventually named according to the tradition of naming planets for the gods of Greek and Roman mythology; Uranus is the father of Saturn, who is in turn the father of Jupiter.

After the discovery, Herschel continued to observe the planet with larger and better telescopes and eventually discovered its two largest satellites, Titania and Oberon, in 1787. Two more satellites, Ariel and Umbriel, were discovered by the British astronomer William Lassell in 1851. The names of the four satellites come from English literature—they are characters in works by Shakespeare and Pope—and were proposed by Herschel's son, John Herschel. A fifth satellite, Miranda, was discovered by Gerard P. Kuiper in 1948. The tradition of naming the satellites after characters in Shakespeare's and Pope's works continues to the present.

Uranian Moons and Rings

Uranus has 27 known satellites forming three distinct groups: 13 small moons orbiting quite close to the planet, 5 large moons located somewhat farther out, and finally, another 9 small and much more distant moons. The members of the first two groups are in nearly circular orbits with low inclinations with respect to the planet.

The densities of the four largest satellites, Ariel, Umbriel, Titania, and Oberon, suggest that they are about half (or more) water ice and the rest rock. Oberon and Umbriel are heavily scarred with large impact craters dating back to the very early history of the solar system, evidence that their surfaces probably have been stable since their formation. In contrast, Titania and Ariel have far fewer large craters, indicating relatively young surfaces shaped over time by internal geological activity. Miranda, though small compared with the other major moons, has a unique jumbled patchwork of varied surface terrain revealing surprisingly extensive past activity. Data for the major satellites are summarized below.

The 5 major moons were discovered telescopically from Earth between 1787 and 1948. Eleven of the 13 innermost moons, with diameters of about 40–160 km (25–100 mi), were found in Voyager 2 images. The rest of the moons, with diameters of 10–200 km (6–120 mi), were detected in Earth-based observations between 1997 and 2003; the orbital motion of nearly all of the outermost moons is retrograde (opposite to the direction of Uranus's spin and revolution around the Sun).

Thirteen narrow rings are known to encircle Uranus, with radii from 39,600 to 97,700 km (24,600 to 60,700 mi), for the most part within the orbits of the innermost moons. For comparison, Uranus's visible surface lies at a radius of about 25,600 km (15,900 mi). The ring system was first detected in 1977 during Earth-based observations of Uranus. Subsequent observations from Earth and images from Voyager 2 and the Hubble Space Telescope clarified the number and other features of the rings.

Neptune

Neptune is the eighth planet in average distance from the Sun. It has 13 known satellites. It was named for the Roman god of the sea, whose trident serves as the planet's astronomical symbol.

Neptune's distance from the Sun varies between 29.8 and 30.4 astronomical units (AUs). Its diameter is about four times that of Earth, but because of its great distance Neptune cannot be seen from Earth without the aid of a telescope. Neptune's deep blue color is due to the absorption of red light by methane gas in its atmosphere. It receives less than half as much sunlight as Uranus, but heat escaping from its interior makes Neptune slightly warmer than the latter. The heat released may also be responsible for Neptune's stormier atmosphere, which exhibits the fastest winds seen on any planet in the solar system.

Neptune's orbital period is 164.8 Earth years. It has not completely circled the Sun since its discovery in 1846, so some refinements in calculations of its orbital size and shape are still expected. The planet's orbital eccentricity of 0.009 means that its orbit is very nearly circular; among the planets in the solar system, only Venus has a smaller eccentricity. Neptune's seasons (and the seasons of its moons) are therefore of nearly equal length, each about 41 Earth years in duration. The length of Neptune's day, as determined by Voyager 2, is 16.11 Earth hours.

As with the other giant planets of the outer solar system, Neptune's atmosphere is composed predominantly of hydrogen and helium. The temperature of Neptune's atmosphere varies with altitude. A minimum temperature of about  $-223^{\circ}\text{C}$  ( $-369^{\circ}\text{F}$ ) occurs at pressure near 0.1 bar. The temperature increases with altitude to about  $477^{\circ}\text{C}$  ( $891^{\circ}\text{F}$ ) at 2,000 km (1,240 mi, which corresponds to a pressure of  $10^{-11}$  bar) as measured from the one-bar level and remains uniform above that altitude. It also increases with depth to about  $6,730^{\circ}\text{C}$  ( $12,140^{\circ}\text{F}$ ) near the center of the planet.

As is the case with several of the other large planets, the winds on Neptune are constrained to blow generally along lines of constant latitude and are relatively invariable with time. Winds on Neptune vary from about 100 m/sec (328 ft/sec) in an easterly (prograde) direction near latitude  $70^{\circ}\text{S}$  to as high as 700 m/sec (2,300 ft/sec) in a westerly (retrograde) direction near latitude  $20^{\circ}\text{S}$ .

The high winds and relatively large contribution of escaping internal heat may be responsible for the observed turbulence in Neptune's visible atmosphere. Two large dark ovals are clearly visible in images of Neptune's southern hemisphere taken by Voyager 2 in 1989, although they are not present in Hubble Space Telescope images made two years later. The largest, called the Great Dark Spot because of its similarity in latitude and shape to Jupiter's Great Red Spot, is comparable to the entire Earth in size. It was near this feature that the highest wind speeds were measured. Atmospheric storms such as the Great Dark Spot may be centers where strong upwelling of gases from the interior takes place.

Neptune's mean density is about 30% of Earth's; nevertheless, it is the densest of the giant planets. Neptune's greater density implies that a larger percentage of its interior is composed of melted ices and molten rocky materials than is the case for the other gas giants.

Neptunian Moons and Rings

Neptune has at least 13 natural satellites, but Earth-based observations had found only 2 of them, Triton in 1846 and Nereid in 1949, before Voyager 2 flew by the planet. The spacecraft observed 5 small moons orbiting close to Neptune and verified the existence of a 6th that had been detected from Earth in 1981. Data for these 8 moons are summarized in the table below. In 2002-03, 5 additional small moons (diameters roughly 30-60 km [20-40 mi]) were discovered telescopically from Earth; they all occupy highly inclined and elliptical orbits that are comparatively far from Neptune.

Triton is Neptune's only large moon and the only large satellite in the solar system to orbit its planet in the retrograde direction (opposite the planet's rotation and orbital motion around the Sun). Thus, as is also suspected of the solar system's other retrograde moons, Triton likely was captured by its planet rather than formed in orbit with its planet from the solar nebula. Its density (2 grams/cm<sup>3</sup>) suggests that it is about 25% water ice and the rest rock. Triton has a tenuous atmosphere, mostly of nitrogen. Its varied icy surface, imaged by Voyager 2, contains giant faults and dark markings that have been interpreted as the product of geyserlike

“ice volcanoes” in which the eruptive material may be gaseous nitrogen and methane. Nereid has the most elliptical orbit of any planet or moon in the solar system; it also is probably a captured object.

Neptune's system of six faint rings, with radii from about 42,000 to 63,000 km (26,000–39,000 mi), straddles the orbits of its 4 innermost moons. (Neptune's visible surface lies at a radius of 24,800 km, or 15,400 mi.) The outermost ring, named Adams, is unusual in that it contains several clumps, or concentrations of material, that before Voyager 2's visit had been interpreted incorrectly as independent ring arcs. What created and has maintained this structure has not yet been fully explained; it has been suggested that the clumps resulted from the relatively recent breakup of a small moon and are being temporarily held together by the gravitational effects of the nearby moon Galatea.

Pluto

Pluto is named for the god of the underworld in Roman mythology. It was long considered the planet normally farthest from the Sun, but on 24 Aug 2006, the International Astronomical Union announced that it was downgrading the status of Pluto to a dwarf planet. The key criterion in this classification was that Pluto, which orbits in the cluttered, icy Kuiper belt, had not cleared the neighborhood around its orbit. This was a controversial decision sure to be revisited.

Pluto has three natural satellites, Charon, Hydra, and Nix. Because Charon's diameter is more than half the size of Pluto's and they orbit around a common center of gravity, it was common to speak of the Pluto-Charon system as a double planet. Charon, named for the boatman in Greek mythology who carried the souls of the dead across the river Styx, was discovered in 1978, while Hydra and Nix were both first seen in 2005. The New Horizons spacecraft, launched in January 2006 and scheduled to arrive at Pluto in 2015, will search for yet more new satellites.

Pluto is so distant (its average distance from the Sun is 39.6 astronomical units, or AU) that sunlight traveling at 299,792 km/sec (186,282.1 mi/sec) takes more than five hours to reach it. An observer standing on the dwarf planet's surface would see the Sun as an extremely bright star in the dark sky, providing Pluto with only 1/1600 the amount of sunlight reaching the Earth.

Pluto has a diameter less than half that of Mercury; it is about two-thirds the size of the Moon. Pluto's physical characteristics are unlike those of any of the planets. Pluto resembles most closely Neptune's icy satellite Triton, which implies a similar origin for these two bodies. Most scientists now believe that Pluto and Charon are large icy planetesimals left over from the formation of the giant outer planets of the solar system. Accordingly, Pluto can be interpreted to be the largest known member of the Kuiper belt (which, as discussed, includes the outer part of Pluto's orbit). Observations of Pluto show that it appears slightly red, though not as red as Mars or Io. Thus, the surface of Pluto cannot be composed simply of pure ices. Its overall reflectivity, or albedo, ranges from 0.3 to 0.5, as compared with 0.1 for the Moon and 0.8 for Triton.

The surface temperature of Pluto has proved very difficult to measure. Observations made from the Infrared Astronomical Satellite suggest values in the range of  $-228$  to  $-215$  °C ( $-379$  to  $-355$  °F), whereas measurements at radio wavelengths imply a range of  $-238$  to  $-223$  °C ( $-397$  to  $-370$  °F). The temperature certainly must vary over the surface, depending on the local reflectivity and solar zenith angle. There is also expected to be a seasonal decrease in incident solar energy by a factor of roughly three as Pluto moves from perihelion to aphelion.

The detection of methane ice on Pluto's surface made scientists confident that it had an atmosphere before one was actually discovered. The atmosphere was finally detected in 1988 when Pluto passed in front of a star as observed from the Earth. The light of the star was dimmed before disappearing entirely behind Pluto during the occultation. This proved that a thin, greatly distended atmosphere was present. Because that atmosphere must consist of vapors in equilibrium with their ices, small changes in temperature will have a large effect on the amount of gas in the atmosphere.

The International System of Units (SI)

Rapid advances in science and technology in the 19th and 20th centuries fostered the development of several overlapping systems of units of measurements as scientists improvised to meet the practical needs of their disciplines. The General Conference on Weights and Measures was chartered by international convention in 1875 to produce standards of physical measurement based upon an earlier international standard, the meter-kilogram-second (MKS) system. The convention calls for regular General Conference meetings to consider improvements or modifications in standards, an International Committee of Weights and Measures elected by the Conference (meets annually), and several consultative committees. The International Bureau of Weights and Measures (Bureau International des Poids et Mesures) at Sèvres, France, serves as a depository for the primary international standards and as a laboratory for certification and intercomparison of national standard copies.

The 1960 International System (universally abbreviated as SI, from système international) builds upon the MKS system. Its seven basic units, from which other units are derived, are currently defined as follows: the meter, defined as the distance traveled by light in a vacuum in  $1/299,792,458$  second; the kilogram (about 2.2 pounds avoirdupois), which equals 1,000 grams as defined by the international prototype kilogram of platinum-iridium in the keeping of the International Bureau of Weights and Measures; the second, the duration of 9,192,631,770 periods of radiation associated with a specified transition of the cesium-133 atom; the ampere, which is the current that, if maintained in two wires placed one meter apart in a vacuum, would produce a force of  $2 \times 10^{-7}$  newton per meter of length; the candela, defined as the intensity in a given direction of a source emitting radiation of frequency  $540 \times 10^{12}$  hertz and that has a radiant intensity in that direction of 1/683 watt per steradian; the mole, defined as containing as many elementary entities of a substance as there are atoms in 0.012 kilogram of carbon-12; and the kelvin, which is  $1/273.16$  of the thermodynamic temperature of the triple point (equilibrium among the solid, liquid, and gaseous phases) of pure water.

Mathematical Formulas

The ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter is  $\pi$  (3.141592653589793238462643383279..., generally rounded to  $\frac{22}{7}$  or 3.1416). It occurs in various mathematical problems involving the lengths of arcs or other curves, the areas of surfaces, and the volumes of many solids.

Large Numbers

The American system of numeration for denominations above one million was modeled on a French system, but subsequently the French system changed to correspond to the German and British systems. In the American system each of the denominations above 1,000 millions (the American billion) is 1,000 times the preceding one (one trillion = 1,000 billions; one quadrillion = 1,000 trillions). In the British system the first denomination above 1,000 millions (the British milliard) is 1,000 times the preceding one, but each of the denominations above 1,000 milliards (the British billion) is 1,000,000 times the preceding one (one trillion = 1,000,000 billions; one quadrillion = 1,000,000 trillions). In recent years, however, British usage has reflected widespread and increasing use of the values of the American system.

Applied Science

Chemistry

Chemistry is the science that deals with the properties, composition, and structure of substances (defined as elements and compounds), the transformations that they undergo, and the energy that is released or absorbed during these processes. Every substance, whether naturally occurring or artificially produced, consists of one or more of the hundred-odd species of atoms that have been identified as elements. Although these atoms, in turn, are composed of more elementary particles, they are the basic building blocks of chemical substances; there is no quantity of oxygen, mercury, or gold, for example, smaller than an atom of that substance. Chemistry, therefore, is concerned not with the subatomic domain but with the properties of atoms and the laws governing their combinations and with how the knowledge of these properties can be used to achieve specific purposes.

Physics

Physics is the science that deals with the structure of matter and the interactions between the fundamental constituents of the observable universe. The basic physical science, its aim is the discovery and formulation of the fundamental laws of nature. In the broadest sense, physics (from the Greek physikos) is concerned with all aspects of nature on both the macroscopic and submicroscopic levels. Its scope of study encompasses not only the behavior of objects under the action of given forces but also the nature and origin of gravitational, electromagnetic, and nuclear force fields. Its ultimate objective is the formulation of a few comprehensive principles that bring together and explain all such disparate phenomena. Physics can, at base, be defined as the science of matter, motion, and energy. Its laws are typically expressed with economy and precision in the language of mathematics.

Weight, Mass, and Density

Mass, strictly defined, is the quantitative measure of inertia, the resistance a body offers to a change in its speed or position when force is applied to it. The greater the mass of a body, the smaller the change produced by an applied force. In more practical terms, it is the measure of the amount of material in an object, and in common usage is often expressed as weight. However, the mass of an object is constant regardless of its position, while weight varies according to gravitational pull.

In the International System of Units (SI; the metric system), the kilogram is the standard unit of mass, defined as equaling the mass of the international prototype of the kilogram, currently a platinum-iridium cylinder kept at Sèvres, near Paris, France; it is roughly equal to the mass of 1,000 cubic centimeters of pure water at the temperature of its maximum density. In the US customary system, the unit is the slug, defined as the mass which a one pound force can accelerate at a rate of one foot per second per second, which is the same as the mass of an object weighing 32.17 pounds on the earth's surface.

Weight is the gravitational force of attraction on an object, caused by the presence of a massive second object, such as the Earth or Moon. Weight is the product of an object's mass and the acceleration of gravity at the point where the object is located. A given object will have the same mass on the Earth's surface, on the Moon, or in the absence of gravity, while its weight on the Moon would be about one sixth of its weight on the Earth's surface, because of the Moon's smaller gravitational pull (due in turn to the Moon's smaller mass and radius), and in the absence of gravity the object would have no weight at all.

Weight is measured in units of force, not mass, though in practice units of mass (such as the kilogram) are often substituted because of mass's relatively constant relation to weight on the Earth's surface. The weight of a body can be obtained by multiplying the mass by the acceleration of gravity. In SI, weight is expressed in newtons, or the force required to impart an acceleration of one meter per second per second to a mass of one kilogram. In the US customary system, it is expressed in pounds.

Density is the mass per unit volume of a material substance. It offers a convenient means of obtaining the mass of a body from its volume, or vice versa; the mass is equal to the volume multiplied by the density, while the volume is equal to the mass divided by the density. In SI, density is expressed in kilograms per cubic meter.

Communications

Introduction to the Internet

The Internet is a dynamic collection of computer networks that has revolutionized communications and methods of commerce by enabling those networks around the world to interact with each other. Sometimes referred to as a "network of networks," the Internet was developed in the United States in the 1970s but was not widely used by the general public until the early 1990s. By early 2009 nearly 1.6 billion people, or roughly 24% of the world's population, were estimated to be regular users of the Internet. It is widely assumed that at least half of the world's population will have some form of Internet access by 2010 and that wireless access will play a growing role.

The Internet is so powerful and general that it can be used for almost any purpose that depends on the processing of information, and it is accessible by every individual who connects to one of its constituent networks. It supports human communication via electronic mail (e-mail), real-time "chat rooms," instant messaging (IM), newsgroups, and audio and video transmission and allows people to work collaboratively at many different locations. It supports access to information by many applications, including the World Wide Web, which uses text and graphical presentations. Publishing has been revolutionized, as whole novels and reference works are available on the Web, and online periodicals, including data prepared daily for an individual subscriber (such as stock market reports or news summaries), are also common. The Internet has attracted a large and growing number of "e-businesses" (including subsidiaries of traditional "brick-and-mortar" companies) that carry out most of their sales and services over the Internet.

While the precise structure of the future Internet is not yet clear, many directions of growth seem apparent. One is the increased availability of wireless access, enabling better real-time use of Web-managed information. Another future development is toward higher backbone and network access speeds. Backbone data rates of 10 billion bits (10 gigabits) per second are readily available today, but data rates of 1 trillion bits (1 terabit) per second or higher will eventually become commercially feasible. At very high data rates, high-resolution video, for example, would occupy only a small fraction of available bandwidth, and remaining bandwidth could be used to transmit auxiliary information about the data being sent, which in turn would enable rapid customization of displays and prompt resolution of certain local queries.

Communications connectivity will be a key function of a future Internet as more machines and devices are interconnected. Since the Internet Engineering Task Force published its 128-bit IP address standard in 1998, the increased number of available addresses ( $2^{128}$ , as opposed to  $2^{32}$  under the previous standard) allowed almost every electronic device imaginable to be assigned a unique address. Thus the expressions "wired" office, home, and car may all take on new meanings, even if the access is really wireless.

Space Exploration

Three men were the first scientists to conceive pragmatically of spaceflight: the Russian Konstantin Tsiolkovsky, the American Robert Goddard, and the German Hermann Oberth. By the end of World War II, the German development of rocket propulsion for aircraft and guided missiles (notably the V-2) had reached a high level. After the war the US and its allies fell heir to the technical knowledge of rocket power developed by the Germans. The technical director of the German missile effort, Wernher von Braun, and some 150 of his top aides surrendered to US troops. Most immigrated to the US, where they assembled and launched V-2 missiles that had been captured and shipped there. The USSR carried out an unpublishized but extensive and likely similar program; Britain and France conducted smaller programs.

In both the US and the USSR the development of military missile technology was essential to the achievement of satellite flight. Preparations for the International Geophysical Year (IGY, 1957–58) stimulated discussion of the possibility of launching artificial Earth satellites for scientific investigations. Both the US and the USSR became determined to prepare scientific satellites for launching during the IGY. While the US was still developing a space launch vehicle, the USSR started the world by placing Sputnik 1 in orbit on 4 Oct 1957. This was followed a month later by Sputnik 2, which carried a live dog. The failure by the US to launch its small payload on 6 Dec 1957 heightened that country's political discomfiture in view of its supposed advanced status in science. Following debates on the necessity of achieving parity, the US government established the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) in 1958. Since that time, NASA has conducted virtually all major aspects of the US space program.

The first successful US satellite, Explorer 1, was launched about four months after Sputnik 1. During the next decades the two countries participated in a space race, conducting thousands of successful launches of spacecraft of all varieties including scientific-research, communications, meteorological, remote-sensing, military-reconnaissance, early-warning, and navigation satellites, lunar and planetary probes, and manned craft. The USSR launched the first human, Yury Gagarin, into orbit around Earth on 12 Apr 1961. On 20 July 1969, the US landed two men, Neil Armstrong and Edwin ("Buzz") Aldrin, on the surface of the Moon as part of the Apollo 11 mission. On 12 Apr 1981, the 20th anniversary of manned space flight, the US launched the first reusable manned space transportation system, the space shuttle. Since the 1960s various European countries, Japan, India, China, and other countries have formed their own agencies for space exploration and development. The European Space Agency (ESA) consists of 18 member states. Private corporations, too, offer space launches for communications and remote-sensing satellites.

In the post-Apollo decades, while the US focused much of its manned space program on the shuttle, the USSR concentrated on launching a series of increasingly sophisticated Earth-orbiting space stations, beginning with the world's first in 1971. Station crews, who were carried up in two- and three-person spacecraft, carried out mostly scientific missions while gaining experience in living and working for long periods in the space environment. After the USSR was dissolved in 1991, its space program was continued by Russia on a much smaller scale owing to economic constraints. The US launched a space station in 1973 using surplus Apollo hardware and conducted shuttle missions to a Russian station, Mir, in the 1990s. In 1998, at the head of a 16-country consortium and with Russia as a major partner, the US began in-orbit assembly of the International Space Station (ISS), using the shuttle and Russian expendable launch vehicles to ferry the facility's modular components and crews into space. In addition to manned and unmanned lunar exploration, space exploration programs have included deep-space robotic missions to the planets, their moons, and smaller bodies such as comets and asteroids. Also important has been the development of unmanned space-based astronomical observatories, which allow observation of near and distant cosmic objects above the filtering and distorting effects of Earth's atmosphere.

Significant space programs and missions:

Sputnik (Russian for "fellow traveler")

Years launched: 1957–58. Country or space agency: USSR. Designation: 1 through 3 (first series). Not manned. Events of note: Sputnik 1 was the first satellite to be successfully launched into space, and Sputnik 2 carried a small dog named Laika ("Barker").

Vanguard

Years launched: 1958–59. Country or space agency: US. Designation: 1 through 3. Not manned. Events of note: The first attempted Vanguard launch, hastily mounted in December 1957 after the USSR's Sputnik successes, failed with the launch vehicle's explosion.

Explorer

Years launched: 1958–75. Country or space agency: US. Designation: 1 through 55. Not manned. Events of note: Explorer 1, the first successful US satellite, discovered Earth's inner radiation belt.

Pioneer

Years launched: 1958–78. Country or space agency: US. Designation: 1 through 13. Not manned. Events of note: Pioneer 10 was the first spacecraft to travel through the asteroid belt, to fly by Jupiter, and to escape the solar system; Pioneer 11 was the first to visit Saturn.

Luna (Russian for "Moon")

Years launched: 1959–76. Country or space agency: USSR. Designation: 1 through 24. Not manned. Events of note: Luna 2 was the first spacecraft to crash-land on the lunar surface; Luna 3 took the first photographs of the Moon's far side; three Lunas (16, 20, and 24) returned with samples of lunar soil.

Vostok (Russian for "east")

Years launched: 1961–63. Country or space agency: USSR. Designation: 1 through 6. Manned. Events of note: The first man in space and to orbit Earth was Soviet cosmonaut Yury Gagarin in Vostok 1, launched on 12 April 1961. Vostok 6 was launched with Valentina Tereshkova, the first woman in space, in 1963.

Mercury

Years launched: 1961–63 (manned missions). Country or space agency: US. Designation: Mercury spacecraft had program designations, but they were better known by the individual names bestowed on them, such as Freedom 7, to honor the seven NASA astronauts chosen for the program. Events of note: Some 20 preliminary unmanned Mercury missions took place between 1959 and 1961. Of the six manned missions, Freedom 7 was launched in 1961 with Alan Shepard (the first American in space) aboard, and Friendship 7 in 1962 with John Glenn (the first American to orbit Earth).

Ranger

Years launched: 1961–65. Country or space agency: US. Designation: 1 through 9. Not manned. Events of note: Ranger 4 was the first US spacecraft to crash-land on the Moon; the last three Rangers returned thousands of images of the lunar surface before crashing on the lunar surface as planned.

Mariner

Years launched: 1962–73. Country or space agency: US. Designation: 1 through 10. Not manned. Events of note: Various Mariners in the program flew by Venus, Mercury, and Mars. Mariner 9 mapped Mars in detail from orbit, becoming the first spacecraft to orbit another planet. Mariner 10 was the first spacecraft to have visited the vicinity of Mercury.

Voskhod (Russian for “sunrise” or “ascent”)

Years launched: 1964–65. Country or space agency: USSR. Designation: 1 and 2. Manned. Events of note: Voskhod 1 was the first spacecraft to carry more than one person; Aleksey Leonov performed the first space walk, from the Voskhod 2 spacecraft, on 18 Mar 1965.

Gemini

Years launched: 1965–66. Country or space agency: US. Designation: 1 through 12. Manned. Events of note: Ten two-person manned missions followed two unmanned test flights. Gemini 8 was the first spacecraft to rendezvous and dock with another craft. The Gemini program showed that astronauts could live and work in space for the time needed for a round-trip to the Moon.

Lunar Orbiter

Years launched: 1966–67. Country or space agency: US. Designation: 1 through 5. Not manned. Events of note: Five consecutive spacecraft made detailed photographic surveys of most of the Moon's surface, providing the mapping essential for choosing landing sites for the manned Apollo missions.

Soyuz (Russian for “union”)

Years launched: 1967–present. Country or space agency: USSR. Designation: 1 through 40 (first series). Three subsequent series of upgraded spacecraft received the additional suffix letters T, TM, or TMA and were renumbered from 1. Manned. Events of note: On 24 Apr 1967 cosmonaut Vladimir Komarov conducted the inaugural test flight (Soyuz 1) of this multiperson transport craft but died returning to Earth after the parachute system failed, becoming the first fatality during a spaceflight. Soyuz 11 ferried the crew of the first space station, Salyut 1. Soyuz TM-2 made the inaugural manned flight of this TM upgrade while transporting the second crew of the Mir space station. Soyuz TM-31 carried up the International Space Station's first three-man crew.

Apollo

Years launched: 1968–72 (manned missions). Country or space agency: US. Designation: 7 through 17. Events of note: Several unmanned test flights preceded 11 manned Apollo missions, including two in Earth orbit (7 and 9), two in lunar orbit (8 and 10), one lunar flyby (13), and six lunar landings (11, 12, and 14–17) in which a total of 12 astronauts walked on the Moon. Apollo 11, crewed by Neil Armstrong, Michael Collins, and Buzz Aldrin, was the first mission to land humans on the Moon, on 20 Jul 1969. Apollo 13, planned as a lunar landing mission, experienced an onboard explosion en route to the Moon; after a swing around the Moon, the crippled spacecraft made a harrowing but safe return to Earth with its crew, James Lovell, John Swigert, and Fred Haise. The landing missions collectively returned almost 382 kg (842 lb) of lunar rocks and soil for study.

Salyut (Russian for “salute”)

Years launched: 1971–82. Country or space agency: USSR. Designation: 1 through 7 (two designs). Manned. Events of note: Salyut 1, launched 19 Apr 1971, was the world's first space station; its crew, cosmonauts Georgy Dobrovolsky, Vladislav Volkov, and Viktor Patsayev, died returning to Earth when their Soyuz spacecraft depressurized. Salyut 6 operated as a highly successful scientific space platform, supporting a series of crews over a four-year period.

Skylab

Year launched: 1973. Country or space agency: US. Manned. Events of note: Skylab, based on the outfitted and pressurized upper stage of a Saturn V Moon rocket, was the first US space station. Three successive astronaut crews carried out solar astronomy studies, materials-sciences research, and biomedical experiments on the effects of weightlessness.

Apollo-Soyuz

Year launched: 1975. Countries or space agencies: US and USSR. Manned. Events of note: As a sign of improved US-Soviet relations, an Apollo spacecraft carrying three astronauts docked in Earth orbit with a Soyuz vehicle carrying two cosmonauts. It was the first cooperative multinational space mission.

Viking

Year launched: 1975. Country or space agency: US. Designation: 1 and 2. Not manned. Events of note: Both probes traveled to Mars, released landers, and took photographs of large expanses of Mars from orbit. The Viking 1 lander transmitted the first pictures from the Martian surface; both landers carried experiments designed to detect living organisms or life processes but found no convincing signs of life.

Voyager

Year launched: 1977. Country or space agency: US. Designation: 1 and 2. Not manned. Events of note: Both Voyager spacecraft flew past Jupiter and Saturn, transmitting measurements and photographs; Voyager 2 went on to Uranus in 1986 and then to Neptune. Both craft continued out of the solar system, with Voyager 1 overtaking Pioneer 10 in 1998 to become the most distant human-made object in space.

space shuttle (Space Transportation System, or STS)

Years launched: 1981–present. Country or space agency: US. Designation: Individual missions were designated STS with a number (and sometimes letter) suffix, though the orbiter spacecraft themselves were reused. Manned. Events of note: The first flight of a manned space shuttle, STS-1, was on 12 Apr 1981 with the orbiter Columbia. The other original operational orbiters were Challenger, Discovery, and Atlantis. During shuttle mission STS-51-L, Challenger exploded after liftoff on 28 Jan 1986, killing all seven astronauts aboard, including a private citizen, Christa McAuliffe; the orbiter Endeavour was built as a replacement vehicle. Space shuttle missions were used to deploy satellites, space observatories, and planetary probes; to carry out in-space repairs of orbiting spacecraft; and to take US astronauts to the Russian space station Mir. Beginning in 1998 a series of shuttle missions ferried components, supplies, and crews to the International Space Station during its assembly and operation. In 2003 the orbiter Columbia disintegrated while returning from a space mission, claiming the lives of its seven-person crew, including Ilan Ramon, the first Israeli astronaut to go into space.

Giotto

Year launched: 1985. Country or space agency: ESA. Not manned. Events of note: This first deep-space probe launched by ESA made a close flyby of Halley's Comet, collecting data and transmitting images of the icy nucleus. It was then redirected to a second comet, using a gravity-assist flyby of Earth, the first time that a spacecraft coming back from deep space had made such a maneuver.

Mir (Russian for "peace" and "world")

Years launched: 1986–96. Country or space agency: USSR/Russia. Manned. Events of note: The core of this modular space station was launched on 20 Feb 1986; five additional modules were added over the next decade to create a large, versatile space laboratory. Although intended for a five-year life, it supported human habitation between 1986 and 2000, including an uninterrupted stretch of occupancy of almost 10 years, and it hosted a series of US astronauts as part of a Mir–space shuttle cooperative endeavor. In 1995 Mir cosmonaut Valery Polyakov set a space endurance record of nearly 438 days.

Magellan

Year launched: 1989. Country or space agency: US. Not manned. Events of note: Magellan was the first deep-space probe deployed by the space shuttle. During four years in orbit above Venus, it mapped some 98% of the surface of the planet with radar at high resolution. At the end of its mission, it was sent on a gradual dive into the Venusian atmosphere, where it measured various properties before burning up.

Galileo

Year launched: 1989. Country or space agency: US. Not manned. Events of note: Galileo released an atmospheric probe into the Jovian system and then went into orbit around Jupiter for an extended study of the giant planet and its Galilean moons. Among many discoveries, Galileo found evidence of a liquid-water ocean below the moon Europa's icy surface.

NEAR Shoemaker (Near Earth Asteroid Rendezvous)

Year launched: 1996. Country or space agency: US. Not manned. Events of note: This spacecraft was the first to orbit a small body (the Earth-approaching asteroid Eros) and then to touch down on its surface. It studied Eros for a year with cameras and instruments and then made a soft landing and transmitted gamma-ray data from the surface for more than two weeks.

Mars Pathfinder

Year launched: 1996. Country or space agency: US. Not manned. Events of note: This was the first spacecraft to land on Mars since the 1976 Viking missions; the lander and its robotic surface rover, Sojourner, together successfully collected 17,000 images and other data.

Cassini-Huygens

Year launched: 1997. Countries or space agencies: US and ESA. Not manned. Events of note: Consisting of an orbiter (Cassini) and a descent probe (Huygens), the spacecraft traveled to the Saturnian system. En route it flew by Jupiter and returned detailed images. Cassini then established an orbit around Saturn for several years of studies, while the Huygens probe parachuted through the atmosphere of the moon Titan, transmitting data during its descent and from the moon's surface.

International Space Station (ISS)

Years launched: 1998–present. Countries or space agencies: US, Russia, ESA, Canada, Japan, and Brazil. Manned. Events of note: A large complex of habitat modules and laboratories, the ISS continued to be assembled in Earth orbit by means of space-shuttle and Proton and Soyuz rocket flights that brought components, crews, and supplies. The first component, called Zarya, was launched on 20 Nov 1998. The ISS received its first resident crew on 2 Nov 2000.

Chandra X-Ray Observatory

Year launched: 1999. Country or space agency: US. Not manned. Events of note: The world's most powerful X-ray telescope, it revolves in an elliptical orbit around Earth, delivering roughly 1,000 observations of the universe annually.

2001 Mars Odyssey

Year launched: 2001. Country or space agency: US. Not manned. Events of note: This spacecraft was launched to study Mars from orbit and serve as a communications relay for future landers. Some of its data suggested the presence of huge subsurface reservoirs of frozen water in both polar regions.

Mars Express

Year launched: 2003. Country or space agency: ESA. Not manned. Events of note: The spacecraft's lander, Beagle 2, which was designed to examine the rocks and soil for signs of past or present life, failed to establish radio contact after presumably reaching the Martian surface.

Mars Exploration Rovers

Year launched: 2003. Country or space agency: US. Designation: Spirit and Opportunity. Not manned. Events of note: Twin six-wheeled robotic rovers, each equipped with cameras, a microscopic imager, a rock-grinding tool, and other instruments, landed on opposite sides of Mars. Both rovers found evidence of past water; particularly dramatic was the discovery by Opportunity of rocks that appeared to have been laid down at the shoreline of an ancient body of salty water.

Deep Impact

Year launched: 2005. Country or space agency: US. Not manned. Events of note: Deep Impact was the first spacecraft designed to study the interior composition of a comet. It released an instrumented impactor into the path of Comet Tempel 1's icy nucleus. A high-resolution camera and other apparatuses on the flyby portion of the probe studied the impact and the resulting crater.

Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter

Year launched: 2005. Country or space agency: US. Not manned. Events of note: It carries the most powerful camera ever flown on a space mission. The Orbiter is an important communications link between other spacecraft, Mars, and Earth.

Phoenix

Year launched: 2007. Country or space agency: US. Not manned. Events of note: Phoenix was the first spacecraft designed to measure water (ice) on a planet other than Earth. It was equipped with robotic arms and sophisticated sensors to dig under the surface of Mars, collect soil samples, and analyze them. It landed on the surface of Mars on 25 May 2008 and quickly established communications with Earth. Before the end of its planned three-month experiment, Phoenix verified the presence of water (ice) in the Martian subsurface.

Air Travel

Flight History

Humanity has been fascinated with the possibility of flight for millennia. The history of flight began at least as early as about AD 400 with historical references to a Chinese kite that used a rotary wing as a source of lift. Toys using the principle of the helicopter—in this case a rotary blade turned by the pull of a string—were known during the Middle Ages. During the latter part of the 15th century, Leonardo da Vinci made drawings pertaining to flight. In the 1700s experiments were made with the ornithopter, a machine with flapping wings.

The history of successful flight begins with the hot-air balloon. Two French brothers, Joseph and Étienne Montgolfier, experimented with a large cell contrived of paper in which they could collect heated air. On 19 Sep 1783 the Montgolfiers sent aloft a balloon with a rooster, a duck, and a sheep, and on 21 November the first manned flight was made. Balloons gained importance as their flights increased into hundreds of miles, but they were essentially unsteerable.

Count Ferdinand von Zeppelin, a former military man, spent much of his life after retiring in 1890 working with balloons, particularly on the steering problem. Hydrogen and illuminating gas were eventually substituted for hot air, and a motor was mounted on a bag filled with gas that had been fitted with propellers and rudders. It was Zeppelin who first saw clearly that maintaining a steerable shape was essential. On 2 Jul 1900 Zeppelin undertook the first experimental flight of what he called an airship. The development of the dirigible went well until the docking procedure at Lakehurst NJ on 6 May 1937, when the Hindenburg burst into flames and exploded, with a loss of 36 lives. Public feeling about the craft made further development futile.

It should be remembered, however, that neither balloons nor dirigibles had produced true flight: what they had done was harness the dynamics of the atmosphere to lift a craft off the ground, using what power (if any) they supplied primarily to steer. The first scientific exposition of the principles that ultimately led to the successful flight with a heavier-than-air device came in 1843 from Sir George Cayley, who is regarded by many as the father of fixed-wing flight. He built a successful man-carrying glider that came close to permitting real flight. His work was built upon in the experiment on gliders from the late 1800s by Otto Lilienthal of Germany and Octave Chanute of the United States. The works of Cayley, Lilienthal, and Chanute would inspire the Wright brothers.

The Americans Wilbur and Orville Wright by 1902 had developed a fully practical biplane glider that could be controlled in every direction. Fitting a small engine and two propellers to another biplane, the Wrights on 17 Dec 1903 made the world's first successful flight of a man-carrying, engine-powered, heavier-than-air craft at a site near Kitty Hawk NC.

World War I (1914–18) further accelerated the expansion of aviation. Though initially used for aerial reconnaissance, aircraft were soon fitted with machine guns to shoot at other aircraft and with bombs to drop on ground targets; military aircraft with these types of missions and armaments became known, respectively, as fighters and bombers.

By the 1920s the first small commercial airlines had begun to carry mail, and the increased speed and range of aircraft made nonstop flights over the world's oceans, poles, and continents possible. In the 1930s more efficient monoplane aircraft with all-metal fuselages and retractable undercarriages became standard. Aircraft played a key role in World War II (1939–45), developing in size, weight, speed, power, range, and armament. The war marked the high point of piston-engined propeller craft while also introducing the first aircraft with jet engines, which could fly at higher speeds. Jet-engined craft became the norm for fighters in the late 1940s and proved their superiority as commercial transports beginning in the '50s. The high speeds and low operating costs of jet airliners led to a massive expansion of commercial air travel in the second half of the 20th century.

The next great aviation innovation after the jet engine was aircraft able to fly at supersonic speeds. The first was a Bell XS-1 rocket-powered research plane piloted by Maj. Charles E. Yeager of the US Air Force on 14 Oct 1947. The XS-1 broke the sound barrier at 1,066 km/hr (662 mph) and attained a top speed of 1,126 km/hr (700 mph). Thereafter many military aircraft capable of supersonic flight were built. The first supersonic passenger-carrying commercial airplane, the Concorde, was built jointly by aircraft manufacturers in Great Britain and France and was in regular commercial service between 1976 and 2003. In the 21st century aircraft manufacturers strove to produce larger planes. A huge new passenger airliner, the double-decker Airbus A380, with a passenger capacity of 555 (40% greater than the next largest airplane), began commercial flights in late October 2007. The Boeing 787 Dreamliner, undergoing final tests in 2009, has a capacity of 330 but a range of 3,050 nautical miles, making it more fuel-efficient than the A380.

Did
know?

The oldest detected meteorite impact on Earth occurred 3.47 billion years ago. The meteor left geochemical evidence of its impact in southern Africa and Australia and is thought to have been about 20 km (12 mi) wide. It would have taken less than two seconds to pass through the atmosphere and slam into the surface of the planet, causing immense tsunamis and devastating erosion to the ocean floor and small continents.

Indexes

Wind Chill Index

The wind chill index is based upon a formula that determines how cold the atmosphere feels by combining the temperature and wind speed and applying other factors. For more information, see www.nws.noaa.gov/om/windchill/index.shtml.

Ultraviolet (UV) Index

The Ultraviolet (UV) Index predicts the intensity of the sun's ultraviolet rays. It was developed by the National Weather Service and the US Environmental Protection Agency to provide a daily forecast of the expected risk of overexposure to the sun. The Index is calculated on a next-day basis for dozens of cities across the US. Other local conditions, such as cloud cover, are taken into account in determining the UV Index number. UV Index numbers are: 0–2 (minimal exposure); 3–4 (low exposure); 5–6 (moderate exposure); 7–9 (high exposure); and 10 and over (very high exposure).

Some simple precautions can be taken to reduce the risk of sun-related illness: limit time in the sun between 10 AM and 4 PM, when rays are generally the strongest; seek shade whenever possible; use a broad spectrum sunscreen with an SPF of at least 15; wear a wide-brimmed hat and, if possible, tightly woven, full-length clothing; wear UV-protective sunglasses; avoid sunlamps and tanning salons; and watch for the UV Index daily. The UV Index should not be used by seriously sun-sensitive individuals, who should consult their doctors and take additional precautions regardless of the exposure level.

Hurricanes

Hurricane and Tornado Classifications

The Saffir/Simpson Hurricane Scale<sup>1</sup> is used to rank tropical cyclones.

Category 1. Barometric pressure: 28.91 in or more; wind speed: 74–95 mph; storm surge: 4–5 ft; damage: minimal.

Category 2. Barometric pressure: 28.50–28.91 in; wind speed: 96–110 mph; storm surge: 6–8 ft; damage: moderate.

Category 3. Barometric pressure: 27.91–28.47 in; wind speed: 111–130 mph; storm surge: 9–12 ft; damage: extensive.

Category 4. Barometric pressure: 27.17–27.88 in; wind speed: 131–155 mph; storm surge: 13–18 ft; damage: extreme.

Category 5. Barometric pressure: less than 27.17 in; wind speed: 155 mph or more; storm surge: 18 ft or more; damage: catastrophic.

Tornado classifications.

Tornado intensity is commonly estimated after the fact by analyzing damaged structures and then correlating the damage with the wind speeds known to produce various degrees of damage. Tornadoes are assigned specific values on the Fujita Scale, or F-Scale, of tornado intensity established by meteorologist T. Theodore Fujita.

Categories:

F0. Wind speed: 40–72 mph; damage: light.

F1. Wind speed: 73–112 mph; damage: moderate.

F2. Wind speed: 113–157 mph; damage: considerable.

F3. Wind speed: 158–206 mph; damage: severe.

F4. Wind speed: 207–260 mph; damage: devastating.

F5. Wind speed: 261–318 mph; damage: incredible.

Hurricane Names

Source: National Hurricane Center.

In 1953, the National Hurricane Center developed a list of given names for Atlantic tropical storms.

This list is now maintained by the World Meteorological Organization (WMO). Until 1979 only women's names were used, but since then men's and women's names have alternated. There are six lists currently in rotation, so names can be reused every six years. Any country affected by a hurricane, however, can request that its name be retired for ten years. Also, if a storm has been particularly destructive, the WMO can remove it from the list and replace it with a different name.

The amount of water in river systems at any given time is but a tiny fraction of the Earth's total water. The oceans contain 97% of all water. About three-quarters of all fresh water is stored as land ice; nearly all of the remainder occurs as groundwater. Lakes account for less than 0.5% of all fresh water, soil moisture 0.05%, and water in river channels only 0.025%, or about one four-thousandth of the Earth's total fresh water.

Measuring Earthquakes

The seismologists Beno Gutenberg and Charles Francis Richter introduced measurement of the seismic energy released by earthquakes on a magnitude scale in 1935. Each increase of one unit on the scale represents a 10-fold increase in the magnitude of an earthquake. Seismographs are designed to measure the different components of seismic waves, such as wave type, intensity, and duration. This table shows the typical effects of earthquakes in various magnitude ranges. For further information, see <www.seismo.unr.edu/ftp/pub/louie/class/100/ma gnitude.html>.

MAGNITUDE	EARTHQUAKE EFFECTS
Less than 3.5	Generally not felt, but recorded.
3.5–5.4	Often felt, but rarely causes damage.
Less than 6.0	At most, slight damage to well-designed buildings. Can cause major damage to poorly constructed buildings over small regions.
6.1–6.9	Can be destructive in areas up to about 100 km (61 mi) across where people live.
7.0–7.9	Major earthquake. Can cause serious damage over larger areas.
8 or greater	Great earthquake. Can cause serious damage in areas several hundred km across.

Major Historical Earthquakes

Magnitudes given for pre-20th-century events are generally estimations from intensity data. In cases where no magnitude is available, the earthquake’s maximum intensity, written as a Roman numeral from I to XII, is given.

Tsunami

A tsunami is a catastrophic ocean wave, usually caused by a submarine earthquake occurring less than 30 mi (50 km) beneath the seafloor, with a magnitude greater than 6.5. Underwater or coastal landslides or volcanic eruptions also may cause a tsunami. The often-used term tidal wave is a misnomer: the wave has no connection with the tides. After the earthquake or other generating impulse, a train of simple, progressive oscillatory waves is propagated great distances at the ocean surface in ever-widening circles, much like the waves produced by a pebble falling into a shallow pool. In deep water, the wavelengths are enormous, about 60 to 125 mi (100 to 200 km), and the wave heights are very small, only 1 to 2 ft (0.3 to 0.6 m). The resulting wave steepness is extremely low; coupled with the waves' long periods that vary from five minutes to an hour, this enables normal wind waves and swell to completely obscure the waves in deep water. Thus, a ship in the open ocean experiences the passage of a tsunami as an insignificant rise and fall. As the waves approach the continental coasts, friction with the increasingly shallow bottom reduces the velocity of the waves. The period must remain constant; consequently, as the velocity lessens, the wavelengths become shortened and the wave amplitudes increase, coastal waters rising as high as 100 feet (30 m) in 10 to 15 minutes. By a poorly understood process, the continental shelf waters begin to oscillate after the rise in sea level. Between three and five major oscillations generate most of the damage; the oscillations cease, however, only several days after they begin. Occasionally, the first arrival of a tsunami at a coast may be a trough, the water receding and exposing the shallow seafloor.

The Seven Wonders of the Ancient World

The seven wonders of the ancient world were considered to be the preeminent architectural and sculptural achievements of the Mediterranean and Middle East. Although different lists exist, the classic list contains the following:

Pyramids of Giza. The oldest of the wonders and the only one substantially in existence today, the pyramids of Giza were erected c. 2575–c. 2465 bc on the west bank of the Nile River in northern Egypt. The designations of the pyramids—Khufu, Khafre, and Menkaure—correspond to the kings for whom they were built. Khufu (also called the Great Pyramid) is the largest of the three, the length of each side at the base averaging 230 m (755  $\frac{3}{4}$  ft). According to Herodotus, the Great Pyramid took 20 years to construct and demanded the labor of 100,000 men.

Hanging Gardens of Babylon. A series of landscaped terraces ascribed to either Queen Sammu-ramat (810–783 bc) or King Nebuchadnezzar II (c. 605–c. 561 bc), the gardens were built within the walls of the royal palace at Babylon (in present-day southern Iraq). They did not actually “hang” but were instead roof gardens laid out on a series of ziggurat terraces that were irrigated by pumps from the Euphrates River.

Statue of Zeus. An ornate figure of Zeus on his throne, this wonder was completed about 430 bc by Phidias of Athens after eight years of work. It was placed in the huge Temple of Zeus at Olympia in western Greece. The statue, almost 12 m (40 ft) high and plated with gold and ivory, represented the god sitting on an elaborate throne ornamented with ebony, ivory, gold, and precious stones. On his outstretched right hand was a statue of Nike (Victory), and in the god’s left hand was a scepter on which an eagle was perched.

Temple of Artemis. The great temple was built by Croesus, king of Lydia, in about 550 bc and was rebuilt after being burned by a madman named Herostatus in 356 bc. The artemesium was famous not only for its great size (over 110 by 55 m [350 by 80 ft]) but also for the magnificent works of art that adorned it. It was destroyed by invading Goths in ad 262, and though it was never rebuilt, copies survive of the famous statue of Artemis in it. This early representation stands stiffly straight, with her hands extended outward. The original was made of gold, ebony, silver, and black stone.

Mausoleum of Halicarnassus. This monumental tomb of Mausolus, the tyrant of Caria in southwestern Asia Minor, was built between about 353 and 351 bc by Mausolus’ sister and widow, Artemisia. According to the description of Pliny the Elder, the monument, designed by the architect Pythius (Pytheos), was almost square, with a total periphery of 125 m (411 ft). It was bounded by 36 columns, and the top formed a pyramid surmounted by a marble chariot. Fragments of the mausoleum’s sculpture are preserved in the British Museum. The mausoleum was probably destroyed by an earthquake, and the stones were reused in local buildings.

Colossus of Rhodes. This huge bronze statue was built at the harbor of Rhodes in ancient Greece in commemoration of the raising of the siege of Rhodes (305–304 bc). The sculptor was Chares of Lyndus. The Colossus was said to be 32 m (105 ft) high, making it technically impossible that it could have straddled the harbor entrance, as was popularly believed. The Colossus took 12 years to build (c. 294–282 bc) and was toppled by an earthquake about 225 bc.

Pharos of Alexandria. This lighthouse, the most famous of the ancient world, was built by Sostratus of Cnidus about 280 bc on the island of Pharos off Alexandria, and it is said to have been more than 100 m (350 ft) high. It is the archetype of all lighthouses since. The lighthouse was destroyed by an earthquake in the 1300s. In 1994 a large amount of masonry blocks and statuary, thought to be wreckage from the lighthouse, was found in the waters off Pharos.

Tallest Buildings in the World

Building height equals the distance from the sidewalk level of the main entrance to the structural top of the building, including spires but not including antennae, signage, or flag poles. Only buildings that have been completed are included here.

Life on Earth

Taxonomy

Taxonomy is the classification of living and extinct organisms. The term is derived from the Greek taxis ("arrangement") and nomos ("law") and refers to the methodology and principles of systematic botany and zoology by which the various kinds of plants and animals are arranged in hierarchies of superior and subordinate groups.

Popularly, classifications of living organisms arise according to need and are often superficial; for example, although the term fish is common to the names shellfish, crayfish, and starfish, there are more anatomical differences between a shellfish and a starfish than there are between a bony fish and a human. Also, vernacular names vary widely. Biologists have attempted to view all living organisms with equal thoroughness and thus have devised a formal classification. A formal classification supports a relatively uniform and internationally understood nomenclature, thereby simplifying cross-referencing and retrieval of information.

Carolus Linnaeus, who is usually regarded as the founder of modern taxonomy and whose books are considered the beginning of modern botanical and zoological nomenclature, drew up rules for assigning names to plants and animals and was the first to use binomial nomenclature consistently, beginning in 1758. Classification since Linnaeus has incorporated newly discovered information and more closely approaches a natural system, and the process of clarifying relationships continues to this day. The table below shows the seven ranks that are accepted as obligatory by zoologists and botanists and sample listings for animals and plants.

Wall Street, which was recognized even before the Civil War as the financial capital of the US, is narrow and short, extending only about seven blocks across part of southern Manhattan in New York City. It was named for an earthen wall built by Dutch settlers in 1653 to repel an expected English invasion.

HIV/AIDS

Acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, or AIDS, is a fatal transmissible disorder of the immune system that is caused by the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). HIV was first isolated in 1983. In most cases, HIV slowly attacks and destroys the immune system, leaving the infected individual vulnerable to malignancies and infections that eventually cause death. AIDS is the last stage of HIV infection, during which time these diseases arise. An average interval of 10 years exists between infection with HIV and development of the conditions typical of AIDS. Pneumonia and Kaposi sarcoma are two of the most common diseases seen in AIDS patients.

HIV is contracted through semen, vaginal fluid, breast milk, blood, or other body fluids containing blood. Health care workers may come into contact with other body fluids that may transmit the HIV virus, including amniotic and synovial fluids. Although it is a transmissable virus, it is not contagious and cannot be spread through coughing, sneezing, or casual physical contact. Other sexually transmitted diseases, such as genital herpes, may increase the risk of contracting HIV through sexual contact.

The main cellular target of HIV is a special class of white blood cells critical to the immune system known as T4 helper cells. Once HIV has entered, it can cause these cells to function poorly or to die. A hallmark of the onset of AIDS is a drastic reduction in the number of helper T cells in the body. Two predominant strains of the virus, designated HIV-1 and HIV-2, are known. Worldwide the most common strain is HIV-1, with HIV-2 more common primarily in western Africa; the two strains act in a similar manner, but the latter causes a form of AIDS that progresses much more slowly.

Diagnosis is made on the basis of blood tests approved by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that may be administered by a health professional. Alternately, a home collection kit may be purchased. No vaccine or cure has yet been developed that can prevent HIV infection. Several drugs are now used to slow the development of AIDS, including azidothymidine (AZT). Protease inhibitors, such as ritonavir and indinavir, have been shown to block the development of AIDS, at least temporarily. Protease inhibitors are most effective when used in conjunction with two different reverse transcriptase inhibitors—the so-called triple-drug therapy.

HIV/AIDS is a major problem in developing countries, particularly sub-Saharan Africa. The most recent UN report states that at the end of 2007, as many as 36.1 million people were estimated to be living with HIV. In 2007 alone, as many as 4.1 million contracted the disease and up to 2.4 million died of it.

Sexually Transmitted Diseases (STDs)

Sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) are usually passed from person to person by direct sexual contact. They may also be transmitted from a mother to her child before or at birth or, less frequently, may be passed from person to person in nonsexual contact. STDs usually initially affect the genitals, the reproductive tract, the urinary tract, the oral cavity, the anus, or the rectum, but they may mature in the body to attack various organs and systems. Following are some of the major STDs:

Syphilis was first widely reported by European writers in the 16th century, and a virtual epidemic swept Europe around the year 1500. Syphilis is spread through direct contact with a syphilis sore (chancere); development of this sore is the first stage of the disease. The second stage manifests itself as a rash on the palms and the bottoms of the feet. In the last stage, symptoms disappear, but the disease remains in the body and may damage internal organs and lead to paralysis, blindness, dementia, and even death. For individuals infected less than a year, a single dose of penicillin will cure the disease. Larger doses are needed for those who have had it for a longer period of time.

Gonorrhea, a form of urethritis (an infection and inflammation of the urethra), is one of the most common STDs. Although spread through sexual contact, the gonorrhea infection can also be spread to other parts of the body after touching the infected area. Men manifest symptoms, which include discharge and a burning sensation when urinating, more often than women. If gonorrhea is left untreated, women may develop pelvic inflammatory disease (PID) and men may become infertile. The disease can also spread to the blood or joints and is potentially life threatening.

Chlamydia, another form of urethritis, can be transmitted during vaginal, anal, or oral sex. Since there are frequently no symptoms, most infected individuals do not know they have the disease until complications develop. Untreated chlamydia can cause pain during urination or sex in men and PID in women. Antibiotics can successfully cure the disease.

Genital herpes, a disease that became especially widespread in the 1960s and 1970s, often presents minimal symptoms upon infection. The most common sign, however, is blistering in the genital area; outbreaks can occur over many years but generally decrease in severity and number. Genital herpes is caused by the herpes simplex viruses type 1 (HSV-1) and type 2 (HSV-2). The former causes infections on and around the mouth but may be spread through the saliva to the genitals; the latter is transmitted during sexual contact with someone who has a genital infection. The HSV-2 infection can cause problems for people with suppressed immune systems and for infants who contract the disease upon delivery. Herpes can also leave individuals more susceptible to HIV infection and make those carrying the disease more infectious. A variety of treatments, including antiviral medications, have been used to help manage genital herpes, but currently there is no cure for the disease.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA)

The FDA is a division of the US Department of Health and Human Services. FDA Web site: <www.fda.gov>.

Mission: To promote and protect the public health by helping safe and effective products reach the market in a timely way and monitoring products for continued safety after they are in use. History: The FDA celebrated its 100th anniversary in 2006, having been created by the passing of the Food and Drugs Act, or Wiley Act, in 1906. The Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of 1938 then brought cosmetics and medical devices under the authority of the FDA. The Food and Drug Administration Act of 1988 officially established the body as an agency of the Department of Health and Human Services, with a commissioner of food and drugs appointed by the president with the consent of the Senate. Location: Rockville MD (with a transfer to Silver Spring MD in progress and scheduled to be completed in 2012). Commissioner of Food and

Drugs: Margaret Hamburg. Budget: FY 2010 (requested) US$3.2 billion. Functions: The FDA is the agency of the US federal government authorized by Congress to inspect, test, approve, and set safety standards for foods and food additives, drugs, chemicals, cosmetics, and household and medical devices. Generally, the FDA is empowered to prevent untested products from being sold and to take legal action to halt the sale of undoubtedly harmful products or of products that involve a health or safety risk. Through court procedure, the FDA can seize products and prosecute the persons or firms responsible for legal violation. FDA authority is limited to interstate commerce. The agency cannot control prices nor directly regulate advertising except of prescription drugs and medical devices.

Body Mass Index (BMI)

The BMI is a measure expressing the relationship of weight to height determined by dividing body weight in kilograms by the square of height in meters (for convenience, the information has been converted to standard US measurements in the table below). It is more highly correlated with body fat than any other indicator of height and weight. The National Institutes of Health recommend using the BMI scale to help assess the risk of diseases and disabilities associated with an unhealthy weight. The BMI may overestimate body fat in athletes and others who have a muscular build, and it may underestimate body fat in older persons and others who have lost muscle mass.

Food Guide Pyramid

In 2005 the USDA released an update of its food-pyramid guide to a healthy diet. It is designed to help individuals get proper nutrients while at the same time consuming the appropriate amount of calories necessary to maintain healthy weight. The 2005 pyramid also provides information about exercise and weight loss. Diets should be low in added sugars, salt, saturated fat and cholesterol and moderate in overall fat.

Find your balance between food and physical activity:

- Be sure to stay within your daily calorie needs.
- Be physically active for at least 30 minutes most days of the week.
- About 60 minutes a day of physical activity may be needed to prevent weight gain.
- For sustaining weight loss, at least 60 to 90 minutes a day of physical activity may be required.
- Children and teenagers should be physically active for 60 minutes every day or most days.

Recommended daily intake

These amounts are appropriate for individuals who get less than 30 minutes per day of moderate physical activity, beyond normal daily activities. Those who are more physically active may be able to consume more because they may have greater calorie needs.

Reading Food Labels

The FDA requires most food manufacturers to provide standardized information about certain nutrients. Within strict guidelines the nutritional labels are designed to aid the consumer in making informed dietary decisions as well as to regulate claims made by manufacturers about their products.

The percent daily value is based on a 2,000-calorie-per-day diet. Some larger packages will have listings for both 2,000-calorie and 2,500-calorie diets. For products that require additional preparation before eating, such as dry cake mixes, manufacturers often provide two columns of nutritional information, one with the values of the food as purchased, the other with the values of the food as prepared.

The FDA selects mandatory label components (see sample label at right) based on current understanding of nutrition concerns, and component order on the label is consistent with the priority of dietary recommendations. Components that may appear in addition to the mandatory components are limited to the following: calories from saturated fat, polyunsaturated fat, monounsaturated fat, potassium, soluble fiber, insoluble fiber, sugar alcohol (for example, the sugar substitutes xylitol, mannitol, and sorbitol), other carbohydrate (the difference between total carbohydrate and the sum of dietary fiber, sugars, and sugar alcohol if declared), percent of vitamin A present as beta-carotene, and other essential vitamins and minerals. Any of these optional components that form the basis of product claims, fortification, or enrichment must appear in the nutrition facts. In 2006 labels were required to specify amounts of trans fatty acids.

Certain key descriptions are also regulated by the FDA. They include the following, in amounts per serving:

- Low fat: 3 g or less
- Low saturated fat: 1 g or less
- Low sodium: 140 mg or less
- Low cholesterol: 20 mg or less and 2 g or less of saturated fat
- Low calorie: 40 calories or less

Ways To Burn 150 Calories

Values shown are approximations. Activities are listed from more to less vigorous—the more vigorous an activity, the less time it takes to burn a calorie. When specific distances are given, the activity must be performed in the time shown (for example, one must run 1.5 miles in 15 minutes to burn 150 calories).

In 17th-century Holland a speculative frenzy erupted over the sale of tulip bulbs. Tulips had been introduced into Europe from Turkey shortly after 1550. Demand for new varieties soon exceeded the supply, and prices rose to astonishing heights. The craze, known as the tulip mania, reached its peak in Holland in 1633-37. Homes, estates, and industries were mortgaged so that bulbs could be purchased; bulbs of rare varieties sold for the equivalent of hundreds of dollars each. The crash came in 1637, when almost overnight the price structure collapsed, sweeping away fortunes and leaving behind financial ruin for many Dutch families.

Iran: Power of the People

by Nahid Siamdoust, TIME/Tehran

After sitting Pres. Mahmoud Ahmadinejad was hastily declared the winner in Iran's 12 June national election, the nation, and especially the capital city of Tehran, erupted in street demonstrations against Iran's regime, which is led by Muslim clerics. TIME's Nahid Siamdoust reported on the first days of the uprising.

When a million people showed up on Revolution Avenue in downtown Tehran to protest the results of the 12 June presidential election, most of them wore sneakers, in case they had to run for their lives. The crowd included people of all walks and ages. Students holding posters that read "Lies forbidden" walked side by side with chadori housewives, heavily made-up young girls, manual laborers, middle-aged government workers, and the elderly. The marchers didn't chant insulting slogans, and there were few police in sight. Beneath the placid surface simmered frustration and anger—but also traces of hope. "People have come out because they've finally had enough. They're tired of all the lies that Ahmadinejad has dished out," said Massoumeh, 46, who brought her two young daughters to the march. (Like most other Iranians I talked to, she did not want to give her full name.)

The popular revolt that spread across the country in the days after the election has been as startling to ordinary Iranians as to the authorities trying to suppress it. Not since the Islamic Revolution of 1979 has Tehran seen such spontaneous outpourings of emotion. Within hours of the announcement of the election results, Tehranis developed their own sign language of dissent. People passing one another stretched hands in peace signs. Drivers on jam-packed streets honked their horns in protest. Apartment dwellers climbed to their rooftops to shout "Alahu akbar" and "Death to dictator!"—a gesture last seen three decades ago.

When the regime blocked the Internet and cell-phone networks, demonstrators organized their rallies by word of mouth. It was democracy in action. "The amazing thing is that this movement has no leader," said Sima, 40, a book editor in Tehran. "Sure, people support [opposition presidential candidate Mir-Hossein] Mousavi, but the real reason they're here is to protest against the fraud."

It's not yet clear where the movement is headed. The regime has crushed challenges to its authority before, most recently in 1999, when students poured into the streets to protest the closing of a reformist newspaper, prompting the government to unleash vigilantes on them. The state deployed its shock troops again this time: members of the Basiji, a pro-Ahmadinejad paramilitary group, stormed dormitories at Tehran University, reportedly killing five students and detaining hundreds. At least one demonstrator was killed when a Basiji opened fire on a crowd. There are eyewitness reports of deaths from clashes across Iran. Yet no matter what transpires—whether the government bows to the demands for change or launches a bloodier crackdown—Iran will never be the same. The election and its aftermath exposed the cynicism of the country's leaders but also revealed the determination of millions of Iranians to reach for a future that suddenly seems within their grasp.

The mood on the streets of Tehran has been a mix of anger, exhilaration, and dread. The day after Ahmadinejad was declared the victor in a landslide, people emptied into the streets in rage. Downtown, groups of demonstrators set several buses, a building, and hundreds of garbage bins on fire, smashed the windows of state banks, and destroyed ATMs. On Ghaem-Magham Street, I watched a lone woman dressed in a head-to-toe black chador standing on the side of the road, flashing the peace sign to passing cars and yelling, "Only Mousavi." The woman, a 36-year-old bank employee named Maryam, had told her children to find dinner for themselves. "What I'm doing here is more important for their future," she said. When people driving by warned her that she might get beaten for speaking so openly, she said, "Let them beat me. My country is going to waste. What am I worth in comparison?"

Just then, a Basiji charged at her from nowhere carrying a metal rod. As he prepared to strike her, a group of men got out of their cars, tackled the man, and started beating him. Maryam got up from the ground, composed herself, and went right back to her spot to continue her mission. I watched as seven more people joined her, until they were chased away by police special forces wielding batons.

Despite the initial postelection mayhem, the government had some reason to believe that the fury would subside. Since Ahmadinejad's victory in 2005, when many voters stayed away from the polls, the reform movement had been largely dormant. So when Mousavi called for a demonstration on 15 June, no one was sure how many people would show up—until Ahmadinejad's victory speech, in which he compared the protesters to fans upset about losing a soccer match and called them a minority of "twigs and mote." A number of people I talked to at the pro-Mousavi march on Revolution Avenue cited the President's comments as reason to keep up the fight. "What he said drove me crazy," said a 26-year-old mechanic from Hashemiye, in south Tehran.

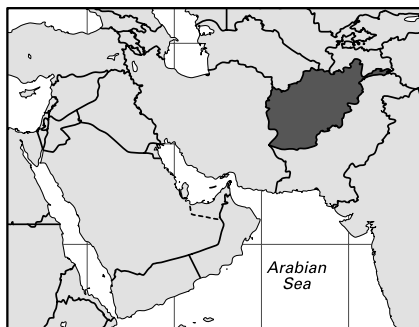

That people are now willing to risk their lives and take action shows that Iran has crossed a threshold. The nature of the demonstrations has reminded the state that people do, after all, care as much about democratic rights as they do about the economy. Ahmadinejad has done poorly on both counts, but as long as the state respected the vote, Iranians were willing to overlook other shortcomings. Now that trust is gone. "This time they went too far," says Mohsen, a 32-year-old government employee. "We already deposed one of the strongest dictatorships in the world 30 years ago. They should know that we won't tolerate another."

Countries of the World

The information about the countries of the world that follows has been assembled and analyzed by Encyclopædia Britannica editors from hundreds of private, national, and international sources. Included are all the sovereign states of the world. The historical background sketches have been adapted, augmented, and updated from Britannica Concise Encyclopedia and the statistical sections from Britannica World Data, which is published annually in conjunction with the Britannica Book of the Year. The section called Recent Developments also has been adapted from material appearing in recent issues of the yearbook, as well as from other sources inside and outside Britannica. The locator maps have been prepared by Britannica's cartography department. Several countries, including those with the largest economies, are given expanded coverage in this section.

All information is the latest available to Britannica. It must be understood that in many cases it takes several years for the various countries or agencies to gather and process statistics—the most current data available will normally be dated several years earlier.

Afghanistan

Official name: Islamic Republic of Afghanistan (Jomhuri-ye Eslami-ye Afghanistan [Dari (Persian)]; Da Afghanistan Eslami Jamhuriyat [Pashto]). Form of government: Islamic republic with two legislative bodies (House of Elders [102]; House of the People [249]). Chief of state and head of government: President Hamid Karzai (from 2002). Capital: Kabul. Official languages: Dari (Persian); Pashto; six additional languages have local official status per the 2004 constitution. Official religion: Islam. Monetary unit: 1 (new) afghani (Af) = 100 puls; valuation (1 Jul 2009) US$1 = Af 47.30.

Demography

Area: 249,347 sq mi, 645,807 sq km. Population (2008): 28,266,000. Density (2008): persons per sq mi 113.4, persons per sq km 43.8. Urban (2006) 21.5%. Sex distribution (2006): male 51.14%; female 48.86%. Age breakdown (2006): under 15,

A few definitions of terms used in the articles may be useful. GDP (gross domestic product) is the total value of goods and services produced in a country during a given accounting period, usually a year. Typically the value is given in current prices of the year indicated. GNI (gross national income) is essentially GDP plus income from foreign transactions minus payments made outside the country. Imports are material goods legally entering a country (or customs area) and subject to customs regulations. The value of goods imported is given free on board (f.o.b.) unless otherwise specified; the value of goods exported and imported f.o.b. is calculated from the cost of production and excludes the cost of transport. The principal alternate basis for valuation of goods in international trade is that of cost, insurance, and freight (c.i.f.); its use is restricted to imports, as it comprises the principal charges needed to bring the goods to the customs house in the country of destination. Exports are material goods legally leaving a country and subject to customs regulations. Valuation of goods exported is virtually always f.o.b.

Background

The area was part of the Persian empire in the 6th century bc and was conquered by Alexander the Great in the 4th century bc. Hindu influence entered with the Hephthalites and Sasanians; Islam became entrenched during the rule of the Saffarids, c. AD 870. Afghanistan was divided between the Mughal empire of India and the Safavid empire of Persia until the 18th century, when other Persians under Nadir Shah took control. Great Britain and Russia fought several wars in the area in the 19th century. From the 1930s Afghanistan had a stable monarchy; it was overthrown in the 1970s. The rebels' intention was to institute Marxist reforms, but the reforms sparked rebellion, and troops from the USSR invaded to establish order. Afghan guerrillas prevailed, and the Soviet Union withdrew in 1988–89. In 1992 an Islamic republic was established, and in 1996 the Taliban militia took power and enforced a harsher Islamic order. The militia's unwillingness to extradite Osama bin Laden and members of his al-Qaeda militant organization following the September 11 attacks in 2001 led to military conflict with the US and allied nations and the overthrow of the Taliban, and a multinational force continued to occupy the country in the early 21st century.

Recent Developments

Afghanistan in 2008 saw a surge of violence from militants relentlessly attacking the US-backed Kabul government. The number of roadside bombs in Afghanistan doubled from a year earlier, to some 2,000, and the increased use of suicide attacks and roadside bombs suggested that the Taliban was adopting strategies from fighting in Iraq. Bold operations in Afghanistan reflected more aggressive Taliban and al-Qaeda activity inside areas in northwestern Pakistan that were being used as a base and sanctuary. An assassination attempt on Pres. Hamid Karzai at a public ceremony in Kabul occurred in April. In June a prison in Kandahar was blown open, freeing almost 400 Taliban fighters. In September US forces adopted an aggressive strategy, including the launch of commando raids and unmanned drone attacks inside Pakistan's tribal areas. In mid-2009 US Pres. Barack Obama began his stated goal of sending an additional 20,000 US troops to the country to aid in the stabilization efforts. The death toll for foreign troops by the middle of July, however, had already made it the deadliest month of the conflict.

Background

The Albanians are descended from the Illyrians, an ancient Indo-European people who lived in central Europe and migrated south by the beginning of the Iron Age. Of the two major Illyrian migrating groups, the Ghegs settled in the north and the Tosks in the south, along with Greek colonizers. The area was under Roman rule by the 1st century BC; after AD 395 it was connected administratively to Constantinople. Turkish invasion began in the 14th century and continued into the 15th century; though the national hero, Skanderbeg, was able to resist them for a time, after his death (1468) the Turks consolidated their rule. The country achieved independence in 1912 and was admitted into the League of Nations in 1920. It was briefly a republic in 1925–28 and then became a monarchy under Zog I, whose initial alliance with Benito Mussolini led to Italy's invasion of Albania in 1939. After the war a socialist government under Enver Hoxha was installed. Gradually Albania cut itself off from the nonsocialist international community and eventually from all nations, including China, its last political ally. By 1990 economic hardship had produced antigovernment demonstrations, and in 1992 a noncommunist government was elected and Albania's international isolation ended. In the late 20th and early 21st centuries, Albania continued to experience economic uncertainty and ethnic turmoil, the latter involving Albanian minorities in Serbia and Macedonia.

Recent Developments

In April 2009 Albania (along with Croatia) joined NATO, reflecting both Albania's progress in developing stable democratic institutions and its achievements in transforming the military into a small professional force able to contribute to NATO's collective defense. Albania also continued to pursue EU integration, with plans to apply for membership in 2009.

Background

Phoenician traders settled the area early in the 1st millennium bc; several centuries later the Romans invaded, and by ad 40 they had control of the Mediterranean coast. The fall of Rome in the 5th century led to invasion by the Vandals and later by Byzantium. The Islamic invasion began in the 7th century; by 711 all of northern Africa was under the control of the Umayyad caliphate. Several Islamic Berber empires followed, most prominently the Almoravid (c. 1054–1130), which extended its domain to Spain, and the Almohad (c. 1130–1269). The Barbary Coast pirates, operating in the area, had menaced Mediterranean trade for centuries, and France seized this pretext to enter Algeria in 1830. By 1847 France had established control in the region, and by the late 19th century it had instituted civil rule. Popular movements resulted in the bloody Algerian War (1954–62); independence was achieved following a referendum in 1962. Beginning in the 1990s, Islamic fundamentalists opposing secular rule brought Algeria to a state of civil war.

Recent Developments

The parliament in 2008 approved constitutional amendments allowing more than two presidential terms for an incumbent, lengthening each term to seven years, and making the government answerable to the president rather than to the parliament. This was precipitated partly by the worsening security situation. Although there was relative calm following the devastating bombings in December 2007, the summer of 2008 was violent, with several serious bomb attacks in June and August and at least 68 deaths.

Military

Total active duty personnel: none. France and Spain are responsible for Andorra's external security; the police force is assisted in alternate years by either French gendarmerie or Barcelona police. Andorra has no defense budget.

Background

Andorra's independence is traditionally ascribed to Charlemagne, who recovered the region from the Muslims in 803. It was placed under the joint suzerainty of the French counts of Foix and the Spanish bishops of the See of Urgell in 1278, and it was subsequently governed jointly by the Spanish bishop of Urgell and the French head of state. This feudal system of government, the last in Europe, lasted until 1993, when a constitution was adopted that transferred most of the coprincipes' powers to the Andorran General Council, a body elected by universal suffrage. Andorra has long had a strong affinity with Catalonia; its institutions are based in Catalan law, and it is part of the diocese of the See of Urgell (Spain). The traditional economy was based on sheep raising, but tourism has been very important since the 1950s.

Recent Developments

A principal goal of Andorra was to institute reforms needed to remove the country from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's list of tax havens. To that end, in early 2009 plans to implement tax information exchange protocols by November were announced.

Background

An influx of Bantu-speaking peoples in the 1st millennium AD led to their dominance in the area by c. 1500. The most important Bantu kingdom was the Kongo; south of the Kongo was the Ndongo kingdom of the Mbundu people. Portuguese explorers arrived in 1483 and over time gradually extended their rule. Angola's frontiers were largely determined with other European nations in the 19th century, but not without severe resistance by the indigenous peoples. Its status as a Portuguese colony was changed to that of an overseas province in 1951. Resistance to colonial rule led to the outbreak of fighting in 1961, which led ultimately to independence in 1975. Rival factions continued fighting after independence; although a peace accord was reached in 1994, forces led by Jonas M. Savimbi continued to resist government control. The killing of Savimbi in February 2002 changed the political balance and led to the signing of a cease-fire agreement in Luanda in April that effectively ended the civil war.

Recent Developments

In early 2008 the discovery of another extensive offshore oil field was announced, which boosted Angola's prospects of remaining among the world's top 10 fastest-growing economies. The wealth accrued from sales of oil remained in the hands of a small number of people, however, and had not brought noticeable benefit to the population as a whole—countrywide, unemployment remained extremely high, and poverty was a continuing problem.

Background

Christopher Columbus visited Antigua in 1493 and named it after a church in Seville, Spain. It was colonized in 1632 by English settlers, who imported African slaves to grow tobacco and sugarcane. Barbuda was colonized by the English in 1678. In 1834 its slaves were emancipated. Antigua (with Barbuda) was part of the British colony of the Leeward Islands from 1871 until that colony was defederated in 1956. The islands achieved full independence in 1981.

Recent Developments

The country was rocked in 2009 by allegations that local banks owned by billionaire Texan R. Allen Stanford had been involved in a US$8 billion fraud. Regulators took over businesses run by Stanford, the country's largest private employer, leading to fears not only of problems related to unemployment but also of attacks on the nation's reputation as a financial center.

Background

Little is known of Argentina's indigenous population before the Europeans' arrival. The area was explored for Spain by Sebastian Cabot in 1526–30; by 1580, Asunción, Santa Fe, and Buenos Aires had been settled. At first attached to the Viceroyalty of Peru (1620), it was later included with regions of modern Uruguay, Paraguay, and Bolivia in the Viceroyalty of the Río de la Plata, or Buenos Aires (1776). With the establishment of the United Provinces of the Río de la Plata in 1816, Argentina achieved its independence from Spain, but its boundaries were not set until the early 20th century. In 1943 the government was overthrown by the military; Col. Juan Perón took control in 1946. He in turn was overthrown in 1955. He returned to power in 1973 after two decades of turmoil. His second wife, Isabel, became president on his death in 1974 but lost power after a military coup in 1976. The military government tried to take the Falkland Islands (Islas Malvinas) in 1982 but was defeated by the British, with the result that the government returned to civilian rule in 1983. The government of Raúl Alfonsín worked to end the human rights abuses that characterized the former regimes. Hyperinflation led to public riots and Alfonsín's electoral defeat in 1989; his Peronist successor, Carlos Menem, instituted laissez-faire economic policies. In 1999 Fernando de la Rúa of the Alliance coalition was elected president, and his administration struggled with rising unemployment, foreign debt, and government corruption until the collapse of the government late in 2001.

Recent Developments

Argentina faced serious economic challenges in 2008, including an annual inflation rate of about 25% and a decelerating economic growth rate of 7% (with a 5% growth rate projected for 2009). In an effort to spur foreign investment, the government announced in September that Argentina would begin paying back the country's overdue loans from the Paris Club of creditor nations. In April 2009 the Argentine government laid claim to some 1,700,000 sq km (660,000 sq mi) of seabed stretching to the Antarctic and to the Falkland, South Sandwich, and South Georgia islands, all territories of the UK. The UK rejected these claims. A similar disagreement was the cause of the Falkland Islands War between the two countries in 1982.

Background

Armenia is a successor state to a historical region in southwestern Asia. Historical Armenia's boundaries have varied considerably, but the region extended over what is now northeastern Turkey and the Republic of Armenia. The area was later conquered by the Medes and the Macedonians and still later allied with the Roman Empire. Armenia adopted Christianity as its national religion in AD 303. It came under the rule of the Ottoman Turks in 1514. Over the next centuries, as parts were ceded to other rulers, nationalism arose among the scattered Armenians; by the late 19th century it was causing widespread disruption. Fighting between Turks and Russians escalated when part of Armenia was ceded to Russia in 1878, and it continued through World War I, leading to Armenian deaths on a genocidal scale. With the Turkish defeat, the Russian-controlled part of Armenia was set up as a Soviet republic in 1921. Armenia became a constituent republic of the USSR in 1936. With the latter's dissolution in the late 1980s, Armenia declared its independence in 1991. It fought Azerbaijan for control over Nagorno-Karabakh until a cease-fire in 1994. About one-fifth of the population left the country beginning in 1993 because of an energy crisis. Political tension escalated, and in 1999 the prime minister and some legislators were killed in a terrorist attack on the legislature.

Recent Developments

Armenia's GDP grew by 10.3% during the first six months of 2008, but the August war between Russia and Georgia caused serious short-term economic disruptions; growth for the whole year was cut to 6.8%. In the realm of foreign affairs, Turkish Pres. Abdullah Gul accepted an invitation from Pres. Serzh Sarkisyan to attend a September soccer match between the Armenian and Turkish national teams.

Background

Australia has long been inhabited by Aborigines, who arrived on the continent 40,000–60,000 years ago. Estimates of the population at the time of European settlement in 1788 range from 300,000 to more than 1,000,000. Widespread European knowledge of Australia began with 17th-century explorations. The Dutch landed in 1616 and the British in 1688, but the first large-scale expedition was that of James Cook in 1770, which established Britain's claim to Australia. The first English settlement, at Port Jackson (1788), consisted mainly of convicts and seamen; convicts were to make up a large proportion of the incoming settlers. By 1859 the colonial nuclei of all Australia's states had been formed, but with devastating effects on the Aborigines, whose population declined sharply with the introduction of European diseases and weaponry. Britain granted its colonies limited self-government in the mid-19th century, and Australia achieved federation in 1901. Australia fought alongside the British in World War I, notably at Gallipoli, and again in World War II, preventing the occupation of Australia by the Japanese. It joined the US in the Korean and Vietnam wars. Since the 1960s the government has sought to deal more fairly with the Aborigines, and a loosening of immigration restrictions has led to a more heterogeneous population. Constitutional links allowing British interference in government were formally abolished in 1968, and Australia has assumed a leading role in Asian and Pacific affairs. During the 1990s it experienced several debates about giving up its British ties and becoming a republic.

Recent Developments

The government of Kevin Rudd, the Australian prime minister elected in late 2007, began well, and the country celebrated in February 2008 when Prime Minister Rudd apologized to the country's indigenous citizens, declaring that "business as usual" was not working and pledging that within five years Aboriginal mortality would be halved to close the massive 17-year gap in life expectancy between Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal Australians. Rudd chose Ross Garnaut to shed expert light on the issues of climate change and global warming, and Garnaut issued a report in which he proposed that the government set limits on the level of carbon emissions that companies could generate and recommended the introduction of a "carbon tax." Action to begin the political process of combating global warming, by reducing emissions by 60% by 2050, began at the end of 2008. By signing the Kyoto Protocol and withdrawing Australian troops from Iraq, Prime Minister Rudd distanced himself from the policies of his predecessor, John Howard. The government trod carefully, however, stressing its pivotal relationship with the US. Maintaining the crucial alliance with the US was such a priority that the prime minister visited Washington DC at the beginning of a 17-day overseas tour aimed at explaining Australian foreign policy under the new administration. During Rudd's talks with US Pres. George W. Bush in March, both leaders agreed on the approach to take in Afghanistan, and in April 2009 Australia announced that it was nearly doubling the size of its force there. In early 2009, forest fires swept through Victoria state. The fires, at least some of which were blamed on arson, claimed an estimated 173 lives. Many in Australia counted such fires, as well as what some were calling the worst drought in a century, as proof of the perils of global warming.

Background

Settlement in Austria goes back some 3,000 years, when Illyrians were probably the main inhabitants. The Celts invaded c. 400 bc and established Noricum. The Romans arrived after 200 bc and established the provinces of Raetia, Noricum, and Pannonia; prosperity followed and the population became Romanized. With the fall of Rome in the 5th century ad, many tribes invaded, including the Slavs; they were eventually subdued by Charlemagne, and the area became ethnically Germanic. The distinct political entity that would become Austria emerged in 976 with Leopold I of Babenberg as margrave. In 1278 Rudolf I of the Holy Roman Empire (formerly Rudolf IV of Habsburg) conquered the area; Habsburg rule lasted until 1918. While in power the Habsburgs created a kingdom centered on Austria, Bohemia, and Hungary. The Napoleonic Wars brought about the creation of the Austrian Empire (1804) and the end of the Holy Roman Empire (1806). Count von Metternich tried to assure Austrian supremacy among Germanic states, but war with Prussia led Austria to divide the empire into the Dual Monarchy of Austria-Hungary. Nationalist sentiment plagued the kingdom, and the assassination of Francis Ferdinand by a Serbian nationalist in 1914 triggered World War I, which destroyed the Austro-Hungarian Empire. In the postwar carving up of Austria-Hungary, Austria became an independent republic. It was annexed by Nazi Germany in 1938 and joined the Axis powers in World War II. The republic was restored in 1955 after 10 years of Allied occupation. Austria became a member of the European Union in 1995.

Recent Developments

In March 2008 the Austrian government earmarked €10.7 billion (US$16.4 billion) for railway improvements and €8.1 billion (US$12.4 billion) for motorway expansion and renovation projects. The largest infrastructure project was the creation of a tunnel under the Brenner Pass, linking Italy with southern Tyrol, which would help to shift some of the transport between Germany and Italy from roads to railways and thereby reduce Austria's carbon dioxide emissions, a significant concern since Austria was on track to miss its Kyoto Protocol targets. In October a set of measures to shore up liquidity in the banking sector was agreed upon, offering up to €100 billion (US$133 billion) in aid to commercial banks.

Background

Azerbaijan adjoins the Iranian region of the same name, and the origin of their respective inhabitants is the same. By the 9th century AD the area had come under Turkish influence, and in ensuing centuries it was fought over by Arabs, Mongols, Turks, and Iranians. Russia acquired the territory of what is now independent Azerbaijan in the early 19th century. After the Russian Revolution of 1917, Azerbaijan declared its independence; it was subdued by the Red Army in 1920 and became a Soviet Socialist Republic. It declared independence from the collapsing Soviet Union in 1991. Azerbaijan has two geographic peculiarities. The exclave Nakhichevan is separated from the rest of Azerbaijan by Armenian territory. Nagorno-Karabakh, which lies within Azerbaijan and is administered by it, has a Christian Armenian majority. Azerbaijan and Armenia went to war over both territories in the 1990s, causing great economic disruption. Though a cease-fire was declared in 1994, the political situation remained unresolved.

Recent Developments

In October 2008 Azerbaijan's prosecutor general announced the arrest of 25 suspects who were identified as belonging to a group of militants with links to neighboring Dagestan, a republic in southern Russia. Following visits in January and June to Armenia and Azerbaijan by Minsk Group mediators of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe, Pres. Ilham Aliyev and his Armenian counterpart, Serzh Sarkisyan, on 2 November signed a declaration in Moscow affirming their shared commitment to a peaceful solution to the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict.

Background

The islands were inhabited by Lucayan Indians when Christopher Columbus sighted them on 12 Oct 1492. He is thought to have landed on San Salvador (Watling) Island. The Spaniards made no attempt to settle but carried out slave raids that depopulated the islands; when English settlers arrived in 1648 from Bermuda, the islands were uninhabited. They became a haunt of pirates, and few of the ensuing settlements prospered. The islands enjoyed some prosperity following the American Revolution, when Loyalists fled the US and established cotton plantations. The islands were a center for blockade runners during the American Civil War. Not until the development of tourism after World War II did permanent economic prosperity arrive. The Bahamas was granted internal self-government in 1964 and became independent in 1973.

Recent Developments

In early 2009 the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development announced that The Bahamas was on its so-called "gray list" of countries; these nations have agreed to improve financial transparency standards but have not signed the necessary international accords to do so.

Background

The area has long been an important trading center and is mentioned in Persian, Greek, and Roman references. It was ruled by Arabs from the 7th century AD but was then occupied by the Portuguese in 1521–1602. Since 1783 it has been ruled by the Khalifah family, though through a series of treaties its defense remained a British responsibility from 1820 to 1971. After Britain withdrew its forces from the Persian Gulf (1968), Bahrain declared its independence in 1971. It served as a center for the allies in the Persian Gulf War (1990–91). Since 1994 it has experienced bouts of political unrest, mainly among its large Shi'ite population. Constitutional revisions, ratified in 2002, made Bahrain a constitutional monarchy and enfranchised women.

Recent Developments

In July 2008 Huda Nonoo, a Bahraini Jew, was appointed ambassador to the US—the first Jewish person ever appointed ambassador by an Arab country. Bahrain's usually robust economy was damaged by the global recession beginning in the fall of 2008.

Background

In its early years Bangladesh was known as Bengal. When the British left the subcontinent in 1947, the area that was East Bengal became the part of Pakistan called East Pakistan. Bengali nationalist sentiment increased after the creation of an independent Pakistan. In 1971 violence erupted; some one million Bengalis were killed, and millions more fled to India, which finally entered the war on the side of the Bengalis, ensuring West Pakistan's defeat. East Pakistan became the independent nation of Bangladesh. Little of the devastation caused by the war has been repaired, and political instability, including the assassinations of two presidents, has continued. In addition, the low-lying country has been repeatedly battered by natural disasters, notably tropical storms and flooding.

Recent Developments

A huge blow was dealt to the US$8 billion "man-power" export as Bangladeshi workers in a number of Middle Eastern countries protested violently against low wages and exploitation. Several of these countries decided to stop taking in any more workers from selective sectors in Bangladesh, and thousands were also deported. In February 2009, soldiers from the Bangladesh Rifles mutinied in protest over poor treatment and pay, killing more than 140 army officers and 20 civilians.

Background

The island of Barbados was probably inhabited by Arawak Indians who originally came from South America. Spaniards may have landed by 1518, and by 1536 they had apparently wiped out the Indian population. Barbados was settled by the English in the 1620s. Slaves were brought in to work the sugar plantations, which were especially prosperous in the 17th–18th centuries. The British Empire abolished slavery in 1834, and all the slaves in Barbados were freed by 1838. In 1958 Barbados joined the West Indies Federation. When the latter dissolved in 1962, Barbados sought independence from Britain; it achieved it and joined the Commonwealth in 1966.

Recent Developments

Barbados reaffirmed in February 2008 its decision not to join Venezuela's PetroCaribe initiative, under which Caracas provided petroleum products and crude oil to Caricom countries on a deferred-payment basis.

Background

While Belarusians share a distinct identity and language, they did not enjoy political sovereignty until the late 20th century. The territory that is now Belarus underwent partition and changed hands often; as a result its history is entwined with those of its neighbors. In medieval times the region was ruled by Lithuanians and Poles. Following the Third Partition of Poland, it was ruled by Russia. After World War I, the western part was assigned to Poland, and the eastern part became Soviet Russian territory. After World War II, the Soviets expanded what had been the Belorussian SSR by annexing more of Poland. Much of the area suffered radiation contamination from the Chernobyl accident in 1986, forcing many to evacuate. Belarus declared its independence in 1991 and later joined the Commonwealth of Independent States. Amid increasing political turmoil in the 1990s, it proposed a union with Russia in 1997 that was still being debated at the start of the 21st century.

Recent Developments

Relations with the US soured in 2008 as Belarus refused to release all designated political prisoners. In March US Ambassador Karen Stewart left the country, and the respective embassies were reduced to a skeleton staff. The Belarusian economy performed well in 2008, however. GDP rose by 10.0%, and the value of industrial output increased by 10.8% and agriculture output by 8.9%. Official unemployment dropped by 15.4%. Nonetheless, during a period of international economic uncertainty, Belarus was forced to negotiate a new US$2 billion loan from Russia, and Moscow continued to demand that Belarus begin using the Russian ruble as a common currency.

Background

Inhabited in ancient times by the Belgae, a Celtic people, the area was conquered by Caesar in 57 bc; under Augustus it became the Roman province of Gallia Belgica. Conquered by the Franks, it later broke up into semi-independent territories, including Brabant and Luxembourg. By the late 15th century AD, the territories of The Netherlands, of which the future Belgium was a part, had gradually united and passed to the Habsburgs. In the 16th century, it was a center for European commerce. The basis of modern Belgium was laid in the southern Catholic provinces that split from the northern provinces after the Union of Utrecht in 1579. Overrun by the French and incorporated into France in 1801, it was reunited to Holland and with it became the independent Kingdom of The Netherlands in 1815. After the revolt of its citizens in 1830, it became the independent Kingdom of Belgium. Under Léopold II it acquired vast lands in Africa. Overrun by the Germans in World Wars I and II, Belgium was the scene of the Battle of the Bulge. Internal discord led to legislation in the 1970s and 1980s that created three nearly autonomous regions in accordance with language distribution: Flemish Flanders, French Wallonia, and bilingual Brussels. In 1993 it became a federation comprising the three regions, which gained greater autonomy at the outset of the 21st century. It is a member of the European Union.

Recent Developments

The longest-running political crisis in Belgium's history formally ended in March 2008 when Flemish Christian Democrat Yves Leterme's five-party coalition government was sworn in—nine months after the country's general election in June 2007. The partnership between the French- and Dutch-speaking Christian Democrats and Liberals and the French-speaking Socialists was far from smooth, however, as the parties negotiated possible constitutional reforms that would affect the future status of the bilingual Brussels-Halle-Vilvoorde constituency and devolve more power to the country's three regions. King Albert II accepted the prime minister's resignation, however, on 22 December after aides to Leterme were accused of having tried to influence a ruling by the country's appeals court.

Background

The area was inhabited by the Maya c. 300 BC–AD 900; the ruins of their ceremonial centers, including Caracol and Xunantunich, can still be seen. The Spanish claimed sovereignty from the 16th century but never tried to settle Belize, though they regarded as interlopers the British who did. British logwood cutters arrived in the mid-17th century; Spanish opposition was finally overcome in 1798. When settlers began to penetrate the interior they met with Indian resistance. In 1871 British Honduras became a crown colony, but an unfulfilled provision of an 1859 British-Guatemalan treaty led Guatemala to claim the territory. The situation had not been resolved when Belize was granted its independence in 1981. A British force, stationed there to ensure the new nation's security, was withdrawn after Guatemala officially recognized the territory's independence in 1991.

Recent Developments

Although petroleum exports to the US outpaced tourism and agriculture as the primary source of foreign exchange in 2008, Belize's vulnerability to world economic shocks led during the first half of 2008 to a record increase (6.9%) in the consumer price index (which dropped to 6.4% for the twelve-month figure).

Background

In southern Benin, the Dahomey, or Fon, established the Abomey kingdom in 1625. In the 18th century, the kingdom became known as Dahomey when it expanded to include Allada and Ouidah, where French forts had been established in the 17th century. In 1857 the French reestablished themselves in the area, and eventually fighting ensued. In 1894 Dahomey became a French protectorate; it was incorporated into the federation of French West Africa in 1904. It achieved independence in 1960. The area called Dahomey was renamed Benin in 1975. Its chronically weak economy produced tension between laborers and the government into the 21st century.

Recent Developments

In March 2008, ministers from Benin and Burkina Faso reached an agreement on lowering tensions in a 68-sq-km (26-sq-mi) border area claimed by both. Meeting at Porga in northern Benin, the delegations agreed that neither would attempt to establish sovereignty over the disputed region and that joint border patrols would operate to maintain security.

Background

Bhutan's mountains and forests long made it inaccessible to the outside world, and its feudal rulers banned foreigners until well into the 20th century. In 1865 it came under British influence, and in 1910 it agreed to be guided by Britain in its foreign affairs. India took over Britain's role in 1949, and China's 1950 occupation of neighboring Tibet further strengthened Bhutan's ties with India. The apparent Chinese threat made Bhutan's rulers aware of the need to modernize, and it embarked on a program to build roads and hospitals and to create a system of secular education. The transition from an absolute monarchy to a parliamentary democracy was completed in March 2008, and a new constitution was promulgated in July.

Recent Developments

Thanks to a boom in tourism and hydropower, Bhutan's economic growth rate stood at 8% in 2008. Living standards were among the region's highest, with an average per capita income of more than US$1,400. Hydropower exports to India drove GDP growth, and total exports to India in 2006–07 amounted to about US$200 million. Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh visited Bhutan in May 2008 and addressed a joint session of the parliament.

Background

The Bolivian highlands were the location of the advanced Tiwanaku culture in the 7th–11th centuries and, with its passing, became the home of the Aymara, an Indian group conquered by the Incas in the 15th century. The Incas were overrun by the invading Spanish under Francisco Pizarro in the 1530s. By 1600 Spain had established the cities of Charcas (now Sucre), La Paz, Santa Cruz, and what would become Cochabamba and had begun to exploit the silver wealth of Potosí. Bolivia flourished in the 17th century, and for a time Potosí was the largest city in the Americas. By the end of the century, the mineral wealth had dried up. Talk of independence began as early as 1809, but not until 1825 were Spanish forces finally defeated. Bolivia shrank in size when it lost Atacama province to Chile in 1884 at the end of the War of the Pacific and again in 1939 when it lost most of Gran Chaco to Paraguay. One of South America's poorest countries, it was plagued by governmental instability for much of the 20th century. Social and economic tension continued in the early 21st century, fueled by resistance to government efforts to eradicate the growth of coca (from which the narcotic cocaine is derived), by unrest among Bolivia's Indians, and by disagreements over how to exploit the country's vast natural gas reserves.

Recent Developments

Pres. Evo Morales, who had nationalized most of the petroleum industry in 2006, remained determined in 2008 to distribute export revenues widely among Bolivians. The resulting stimulus at a time of high world energy prices led Bolivia's GDP to grow by 6.2%. His willingness to nationalize key industries was predicted to prove controversial in the future, as Bolivia possessed half of the world's known reserves of lithium, a key component in battery production and the growing field of electric-car manufacturing.

Background

Habitation long predates the era of Roman rule, when much of the country was included in the province of Dalmatia. Slav settlement began in the 6th century AD. For the next several centuries, parts of the region fell under the rule of Serbs, Croats, Hungarians, Venetians, and Byzantines. The Ottoman Turks invaded Bosnia in the 14th century, and after many battles it became a Turkish province in 1463. Herzegovina, then known as Hum, was taken in 1482. In the 16th–17th centuries the area was an important Turkish outpost, constantly at war with the Habsburgs and Venice. During this period much of the native population converted to Islam. At the Congress of Berlin after the Russo-Turkish War of 1877–78, Bosnia and Herzegovina was assigned to Austria-Hungary, and it was fully annexed in 1908. Growing Serb nationalism resulted in the 1914 assassination of the Austrian archduke Francis Ferdinand at Sarajevo by a Bosnian Serb, an event that precipitated World War I. After the war the area was annexed to Serbia. Following World War II the twin territory became a republic of communist Yugoslavia. With the collapse of communist regimes in Eastern Europe, Bosnia and Herzegovina declared its independence in 1992; its Serb population objected, and conflict ensued among Serbs, Croats, and Muslims. The 1995 peace accord established a loosely federated government roughly divided between a Muslim-Croat Federation and a Serb Republic (Republika Srpska). From 1996 to 2002 an EU peacekeeping force was installed there.

Recent Developments

Bosnia and Herzegovina's June 2008 signing of the Stabilization and Association Agreement (SAA) signaled the first concrete step in the country's path toward EU membership. Both the Muslim-Croatian Federation and the Republika Srpska approved laws for police reform, a requirement that needed to occur prior to the SAA signing. Agreement on state property law, another key requirement for EU integration, was reached in April 2009.

Background

The region's earliest inhabitants were the Khoekhoe and San (Bushmen). Sites were settled as early as AD 190 during the southerly migration of Bantu-speaking farmers. Tswana dynasties, which developed in the western Transvaal in the 13th–14th centuries, moved into Botswana in the 18th century and established several powerful states. European missionaries arrived in the early 19th century, but it was the discovery of gold in 1867 that excited European interest. In 1885 the area became the British Bechuanaland Protectorate. The next year the region south of the Molopo River became a crown colony, and it was annexed by the Cape Colony 10 years later. Bechuanaland itself continued as a British protectorate until the 1960s. In 1966 the Republic of Bechuanaland (later Botswana) was proclaimed an independent member of the British Commonwealth. Independent Botswana tried to maintain a delicate balance between its economic dependence on South Africa and its relations with the surrounding black countries; the independence of Namibia in 1990 and South Africa's rejection of apartheid eased tensions.

Recent Developments

Botswana, the world's leading producer of diamonds by value, opened a new rough-diamond sorting center in March 2008. The center, created in partnership with the De Beers diamond conglomeration, increased manufacturing employment in the country by some 10%. It also marked the first instance in which the entire diamond trade process—from mining to marketing—took place within the country.

Background

Little is known about Brazil's early indigenous inhabitants. Though the area was theoretically allotted to Portugal by the 1494 Treaty of Tordesillas, it was not formally claimed by discovery until Pedro Álvares Cabral accidentally touched land in 1500. It was first settled by the Portuguese in the early 1530s on the southeastern coast and at São Vicente (near modern São Paulo); the French and Dutch created small settlements over the next century. A viceroyalty was established in 1640, and Rio de Janeiro became the capital in 1763. In 1808 Brazil became the refuge and the seat of the government of John VI of Portugal when Napoleon invaded Portugal; ultimately the Kingdom of Portugal, Brazil, and the Algarves was proclaimed, and John ruled from Brazil in 1815–21. On John's return to Portugal, his son Pedro I proclaimed Brazilian independence. In 1889 his successor, Pedro II, was deposed, and a constitution mandating a federal republic was adopted. The 20th century saw increased immigration and growth in manufacturing along with frequent military coups and suspensions of civil liberties. Construction of a new capital at Brasília, intended to spur development of the country's interior, worsened the inflation rate. After 1979 the military government began a gradual return to democratic practices, and in 1989 the first popular presidential election in 29 years was held.

Recent Developments

In 2008 Brazil benefited from a wave of high commodity prices, new infrastructure investment programs, a burgeoning domestic market, and record state and federal revenues. In April Standard & Poor's became the first rating agency to upgrade Brazil to investment-grade status. After riding the commodity boom to its peak in July, however, Brazil witnessed declining liquidity and tighter credit markets as the global economy began its downturn. Notwithstanding this global financial crisis, the Brazilian economy showed continued signs of growth. GDP grew an estimated 11.2% and accumulated inflation reached only 5.9%. Global volatility, however, did affect the Brazilian stock market, which fell nearly 60% in late October from its highest close of 2008. Severe flooding wreaked havoc in the south in late November. The flooding resulted in the deaths of more than 130 people and left tens of thousands homeless and more than one million without power. Flooding occurred in the north in April and May 2009, leaving at least 40 dead and more than 300,000 homeless.

Background

Brunei traded with China in the 6th century AD. Through allegiance to the Javanese Majapahit kingdom (13th–15th centuries), it came under Hindu influence. In the early 15th century, with the decline of the Majapahit kingdom, many people converted to Islam, and Brunei became an independent sultanate. When Ferdinand Magellan's ships visited in 1521, the sultan of Brunei controlled almost all of Borneo and its neighboring islands. Beginning in the late 16th century, Brunei lost power because of the Portuguese, Dutch, and, later, British activities in the region. By the 19th century, the sultanate of Brunei included Sarawak (present-day Brunei) and part of North Borneo (now part of Sabah). In 1841 a revolt took place against the sultan, and a British soldier, James Brooke, helped put it down; he was later proclaimed governor. In 1847 the sultanate entered into a treaty with Great Britain and by 1906 had yielded all administration to a British resident. Brunei rejected membership in the Federation of Malaysia in 1963, negotiated a new treaty with Britain in 1979, and achieved independence in 1984, with membership in the Commonwealth.

Recent Developments

In a bid to promote industrial investment in nonenergy sectors, Brunei signed an agreement in early 2008 with the American company Alcoa to study the feasibility of building an aluminum-smelting plant. Brunei also inaugurated Wawasan Brunei 2035, a strategic economic-development plan with the goal of seeing the sultanate rank in the top 10 countries in the world in terms of GDP per capita by the year 2035. It envisioned coordinated educational, employment, and environmental plans, among others, creating a diversified, sustainable economy.

Background

Evidence of human habitation in Bulgaria dates from prehistoric times. Thracians were its first recorded inhabitants, dating from c. 3500 bc, and their first state dates from about the 5th century bc; the area was subdued by the Romans, who divided it into the provinces of Moesia and Thrace. In the 7th century ad the Bulgars took the region to the south of the Danube. The Byzantine Empire in 681 formally recognized Bulgar control over the area between the Balkans and the Danube. In the second half of the 14th century, Bulgaria fell to the Turks and ultimately lost its independence. At the end of the Russo-Turkish War (1877–78), Bulgaria rebelled. The ensuing Treaty of San Stefano was unacceptable to the Great Powers, and the Congress of Berlin (1878) resulted. In 1908 the Bulgarian ruler, Ferdinand, declared Bulgaria's independence. After its involvement in the Balkan Wars (1912–13), Bulgaria lost territory. It sided with the Central Powers in World War I and with Germany in World War II. A communist coalition seized power in 1944, and in 1946 a people's republic was declared. Like other Eastern European countries in the late 1980s, Bulgaria experienced political unrest; its communist leader resigned in 1989. A new constitution proclaiming a republic was implemented in 1991. Bulgaria joined NATO in 2004 and the EU in 2007.

Recent Developments

In 2008 Bulgaria's GDP rose 6.0%, largely fueled by the services and construction sectors; tourism boomed by 10.4%, and real-estate prices were valued 24.9% higher than in 2007. Nevertheless, experts pointed to the slowdown in health care reform as one of the biggest risk factors for Bulgaria's long-term economic development. Moreover, the country continued to face a large trade deficit and a persisting pattern of emigration among young professionals. The energy sector made some long-term investments, including participation in the South Stream project, a gas pipeline that would supply natural gas to Romania, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Italy, Austria, and Serbia, starting in 2013.

Background

Probably in the 14th century, the Mossi and Gurma peoples established themselves in eastern and central areas of what is now Burkina Faso. The Mossi kingdoms of Yatenga and Ouagadougou existed into the early 20th century. A French protectorate was established over the region (1895–97), and its southern boundary was demarcated through an Anglo-French agreement. It was part of the Upper Senegal–Niger colony and then became a separate colony in 1919. Named Upper Volta, it was constituted an overseas territory within the French Union in 1947, became an autonomous republic within the French Community in 1958, and achieved total independence in 1960. Since then, the country has been ruled primarily by the military and has experienced several coups; following one in 1983, the country received its present name. A new constitution, adopted in 1991, restored multiparty rule.

Recent Developments

In late February 2008 popular discontent over rapidly increasing food prices erupted into serious riots in the Burkina Faso capital and in the cities of Bobo-Dioulasso, Banfora, and Ouahigouya. Security forces arrested at least 180 people for organizing the protests. Import taxes on basic necessities were suspended that month, and in March the government announced that food prices were to be artificially cut by 5–15%. These actions were reversed late in the year as pressure on food prices eased. Economic growth was nonetheless estimated at 4.5% for the year.

Background

Original settlement by the Twa people was followed by Hutu settlement, which occurred gradually and was completed by the 11th century. The Tutsi arrived 300–400 years later; though a minority, they established the kingdom of Burundi in the 16th century. In the 19th century the area came within the German sphere of influence, but the Tutsi remained in power. Following World War I the Belgians took control of the area, which became a UN trusteeship after World War II. Colonial-period conditions had intensified Hutu-Tutsi ethnic animosities, and as independence neared, hostilities flared. Independence was granted in 1962 in the form of a kingdom ruled by the Tutsi. In 1965 the Hutu rebelled but were brutally repressed. The rest of the 20th century saw violent clashes between the two groups. In 2001 a power-sharing transitional government was established, paving the way to the promulgation of a new constitution and the installation of a new government in 2005.

Recent Developments

The National Liberation Forces (FNL), the last rebel group in Burundi following a 14-year civil war, launched several deadly attacks in April 2008 before signing a peace agreement in June. The removal of an ethnic term from the FNL's official name, its registration as a political party, and the release of more than 100 former child soldiers in April 2009 led to greater hopes for peace.

Background

In the early Christian era, what is now Cambodia was under Hindu and, to a lesser extent, Buddhist influence. The Khmer state gradually spread in the early 7th century and reached its height under Jayavarman II and his successors in the 9th–12th centuries, when it ruled the Mekong Valley and the tributary Shan states and built Angkor. Widespread adoption of Buddhism occurred in the 13th century, resulting in a script change from Sanskrit to Pali. From the 13th century Cambodia was attacked by Annam and Siamese city-states and was alternately a province of one or the other. The area became a French protectorate in 1863. It was occupied by the Japanese in World War II and became independent in 1954. Cambodia's borders were the scene of fighting in the Vietnam War from 1961, and in 1970 its northeastern and eastern areas were occupied by the North Vietnamese and penetrated by US and South Vietnamese forces. An indiscriminate US bombing campaign alienated much of the population, enabling the communist Khmer Rouge under Pol Pot to seize power in 1975. Their regime of terror resulted in the deaths of at least one million Cambodians. Vietnam invaded in 1979 and drove the Khmer Rouge into the western hinterlands, but it was unable to effect reconstruction of the country, and Cambodian infighting continued. A peace accord was reached by most Cambodian factions under UN auspices in 1991, and elections were held in 1993. In 2004 King Norodom Sihanouk abdicated, and his son Sihamoni was named his successor.

The Kizuna Bridge became the first bridge ever to span the Mekong River when it opened to the public on 4 Dec 2001. The Mekong flows through Cambodia for about 500 km (300 mi) and is considered the country's most important river.

Recent Developments

A major crisis in Cambodia was a standoff between Thai and Cambodian troops in the area around the ancient temple of Preah Vihear. A 1962 World Court decision that had declared the temple site Cambodian territory was never popularly accepted among Thais, and Preah Vihear carried great symbolic weight in both countries. In July 2008 UNESCO declared Preah Vihear a World Heritage site; a troop buildup began, and soon there were reportedly thousands of troops from both countries along the disputed border. Actual fighting broke out in October, when three Cambodian soldiers were killed and several Thai troops captured. Despite continuing talks, three Thai soldiers were killed in fighting in April 2009.

Background

The Cameroon area had long been inhabited before European colonization. Bantu speakers from equatorial Africa settled in the south, followed by Muslim Fulani from the Niger River basin, who settled in the north. Portuguese explorers visited in the late 15th century and established a foothold, but they lost control to the Dutch in the 17th century. In 1884 the Germans took control and extended their protectorate over Cameroon. In World War I joint French-British action forced the Germans to retreat, and after the war the region was divided into French and British administrative zones. After World War II the two areas became UN trusteeships. In 1960 the French trust territory became an independent republic. In 1961 the southern part of the British trust territory voted for union with the new republic of Cameroon, and the northern part voted for union with Nigeria. In recent decades economic problems have produced unrest in the country.

Recent Developments

On 14 August 2008, Nigeria officially relinquished the Bakassi Peninsula to Cameroon, six years after the World Court decision to uphold Cameroon's claims to the oil-rich area. In the months before the handover, more than 50 people died in clashes between the mainly Nigerian residents and the Cameroonian army. Despite promises of security for all, an estimated 100,000 people fled Bakassi for Akwa Ibom state in Nigeria.

Background

Originally inhabited by American Indians and Inuit, Canada was visited c. AD 1000 by Scandinavian explorers, whose discovery is confirmed by archaeological evidence from Newfoundland. Fishing expeditions off Newfoundland by the English, French, Spanish, and Portuguese began as early as 1500. The French claim to Canada was made in 1534 when Jacques Cartier entered the Gulf of St. Lawrence. A small settlement was made in Nova Scotia (Acadia) in 1605, and in 1608 Samuel de Champlain founded Quebec. Fur trading was the impetus behind the early colonizing efforts. In response to French activity, the English in 1670 formed the Hudson's Bay Company.

The British-French rivalry for the interior of upper North America lasted almost a century. The first French loss occurred in 1713 at the conclusion of Queen Anne's War (War of the Spanish Succession) when Nova Scotia and Newfoundland were ceded to the British. The Seven Years' War (French and Indian War) resulted in France's expulsion from continental North America in 1763. After the US War of Independence, the population was augmented by Loyalists fleeing the US, and the increasing number arriving in Quebec led the British to divide the colony into Upper and Lower Canada in 1791. The British reunited the two provinces in 1841. Canadian expansionism resulted in the confederation movement of the mid-19th century, and in 1867 the Dominion of Canada, comprising Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, and Ontario, came into existence. After confederation, Canada entered a period of westward expansion.

The prosperity that accompanied Canada into the 20th century was marred by continuing conflict between the English and French communities. Through the Statute of Westminster (1931), Canada was recognized as an equal of Great Britain. With the Constitution Act of 1982, the British gave Canada total control over its constitution and severed the remaining legal connections between the two countries. French Canadian unrest continued to be a major concern, with a movement growing for Quebec separatism in the late 20th century. Referendums for more political autonomy for Quebec were rejected in 1992 and 1995, but the issue remained unresolved. In 1999 Canada formed the new territory of Nunavut, and in December 2001 Newfoundland was renamed Newfoundland and Labrador.

Recent Developments

Although Prime Minister Stephen Harper's Conservative Party won reelection in October, 2008 was an otherwise difficult year for the Conservatives, who faced several scandals. Harper came under fire in February after an audiotape interview from 2005 was released in which the Conservative leader seemed to indicate that his party had offered financial incentives to Independent MP Chuck Cadman in an effort to persuade him to cast a vote of no confidence in the previous Liberal government. Foreign Affairs Minister Maxime Bernier—who had previously been criticized for promising to fly aid to hurricane-ravaged Myanmar (Burma) on military planes that were actually unavailable and for not knowing the name of the president of Haiti—resigned in May, hours before news leaked that he had left confidential NATO documents at the home of a woman with whom he had been involved and had asked her to dispose of them. In June the prime minister made a formal apology on behalf of the country to former students of residential schools that were operated by the government and numerous Christian churches from the 19th century until 1996. The schools, often sites of physical, emotional, and sexual abuse, removed aboriginal children from their families as part of an aggressive assimilation policy that sought to destroy First Nations culture. Approximately 86,000 of the former students were still living in 2008; they would share in a Can$2 billion government compensation package.

Finance Minister Jim Flaherty in February presented Canada's smallest budget in 11 years. Major spending announcements included Can$1 billion over three years and Can$250 million over five years to assist the struggling manufacturing and auto industries, respectively; a Can$2 billion infrastructure investment fund; a tax savings account in which Canadians could deposit or invest up to Can$5,000 tax free each year; and Can$500 million for public transit. Spending increased by only 3.4%—a significant reduction from the 14.8% rise from two previous Conservative budgets. The outlook had changed by the end of the year in the wake of a global credit and financial crisis. In August and September 2008 Canada's stock market lost 20% of its value and was off by almost 40% from record highs set the previous year. The federal government was expected to have a deficit of Can$40 billion in fiscal year 2009, while Ontario announced the largest deficit in its history, Can$14.2 billion. The Canadian dollar was valued below US$0.90 in May 2009, following a 30-year high in 2007 in which it had closed above parity with the US dollar.

Arctic initiatives, particularly those strengthening Canada's claim of sovereignty over its territorial waters for security and resource-extraction purposes, were high priorities. In August 2008 the government announced a state-of-the-art mapping program to identify energy- and mineral-development potential in the area and a series of large-scale rehearsals for emergencies involving cruise ships and commercial vessels. In April 2009 the government announced the composition of a new 500-soldier Arctic force that would be formed in the next several years. The following month soldiers underwent extreme-weather training at the site of the new Arctic base under construction at Resolute Bay.

Background

When visited by the Portuguese in 1456–60, the islands were uninhabited. In 1460 Diogo Gomes sighted and named Maio and São Tiago, and in 1462 the first settlers landed on São Tiago, founding the city of Ribeira Grande. The city's importance grew with the development of the slave trade, but its wealth attracted pirates so often that it was abandoned after 1712. The prosperity of the Portuguese-controlled islands vanished with the decline of the slave trade in the 19th century but later improved because of their position on the great trade routes between Europe, South America, and southern Africa. In 1951 the colony became an overseas province of Portugal. Many islanders preferred independence, and it was granted in 1975. At one time associated politically with Guinea-Bissau, Cape Verde split from it in the wake of a 1980 coup there.

Recent Developments

In 2008 Cape Verde continued to enjoy political stability and annual economic growth of more than 6%, thanks in part to new infrastructure development and increased tourism. In January, Cape Verde was upgraded by the United Nations from a lower-income country to a middle-income country, joining only 13 other African countries with that status. On 23 July Cape Verde became the 153rd member of the World Trade Organization.

Background

For several centuries before the arrival of Europeans, the territory was subjected to slave traders. The French explored and claimed central Africa and in 1889 established a post at Bangui. In 1898 they partitioned the colony among commercial concessionaires. United with Chad in 1906 to form the French colony of Ubangi-Shari, it later became part of French Equatorial Africa. It was separated from Chad in 1920 and became an overseas territory in 1946. Named an autonomous republic within the French Community in 1958, the country achieved independence in 1960. In 1966 the military overthrew a civilian government and installed Jean-Bédél Bokassa, who in 1976 declared himself Emperor Bokassa I and renamed the country the Central African Empire. The military again seized power in the 1980s. A new constitution was promulgated in 2004, and a democratically elected government was installed in 2005.

Recent Developments

By early 2008, 100,000 Central Africans had fled from the north to neighboring countries, while an additional 200,000 had been driven from their homes by continuing violent confrontations between the army and various rebel groups. An EU force of more than 3,000 was mobilized in March of that year to the Central African Republic and Chad to protect displaced people fleeing from the strife in Darfur, a region in The Sudan. As violence continued, a UN peacekeeping mission, with a mandate for up to 5,200 soldiers, took over from the EU force in March 2009.

Background

About AD 800 the kingdom of Kanem was founded in north-central Africa, and by the early 1200s its borders had expanded to form a new kingdom, Kanem-Bornu, in the northern regions of the area. Its power peaked in the 16th century with its command of the southern terminus of the trans-Saharan trade route to Tripoli. Around this time the rival kingdoms of Baguirmi and Wadai evolved in the south. In the years 1883–93 all three kingdoms fell to the Sudanese adventurer Rabih al-Zubayr, who was in turn pushed out by the French in 1900. Extending their power, the French in 1910 made Chad a part of French Equatorial Africa. Chad became a separate colony in 1920 and was made an overseas territory in 1946. The country achieved independence in 1960. This was followed by decades of civil war and frequent intervention by France and Libya.

Recent Developments

An EU military force of 3,700 troops (EUFOR) was deployed to Chad in early 2008 to help protect humanitarian personnel providing services mainly to refugees streaming in from Darfur, a war-torn region in The Sudan, as well as to some 180,000 internally displaced people. In February the long-standing conflict in eastern Chad between the government and rebels reached the capital, and heavy fighting occurred there before the rebels were expelled. Chad retained its reputation as one of the most corrupt countries in the world, and much of the money that flowed to the government in the form of new oil revenues seemed to disappear. In March 2009 a UN peace-keeping force with a mandate for 5,200 troops replaced EUFOR.

Background

Originally inhabited by native peoples, including the Mapuche, the Chilean coast was invaded by the Spanish in 1536. A settlement begun at Santiago in 1541 was governed under the Viceroyalty of Peru but became a separate captaincy general in 1778. It revolted against Spanish rule in 1810; its independence was finally assured by the victory of José de San Martín in 1818, and the area was then governed by Bernardo O'Higgins to 1823. In the War of the Pacific against Peru and Bolivia, it won the rich nitrate fields on the coast of Bolivia, effectively forcing that country into a landlocked position. Chile remained neutral in World War I and World War II but severed diplomatic ties with the Axis powers in 1943. In 1970 Salvador Allende was elected president, becoming the first avowed Marxist to be elected chief of state in Latin America. Following economic upheaval, he was ousted in 1973 in a coup led by Gen. Augusto Pinochet, whose military junta for many years harshly suppressed all internal opposition. A national referendum in 1988 rejected Pinochet, and elections held in 1989 returned the country to civilian rule.

Recent Developments

Chile's economy in 2008 continued to thrive, with yearly growth estimated at 4%, though inflation was up, running at 9%. Ironically, the consequences of the US financial crisis for Chile had positive as well as negative aspects. For example, the US dollar, which had dropped markedly in recent years, gained significant ground in late 2008. This, coupled with the decline in the price of oil, helped boost the Chilean export sector, one of the most vibrant sectors of Chile's economy. The price of copper, Chile's longtime leading export, declined in the later part of the year, however, as the global slowdown reduced demand for the metal. The spread of a virus among Chile's farmed salmon caused concern in the aquaculture industry.

Although dozens of salmon farms were affected, the volume of Chile's exports of farmed fish remained strong, with most going to the US and Japan, the country's largest export markets.

Background

The discovery of Peking man (Homo erectus) in 1927 dated the advent of early humans in what is now China to the Middle Pleistocene, about 900,000 to 130,000 years ago. Chinese civilization probably spread from the Huang He (Yellow River) valley, where it existed c. 3000 bc. The first dynasty for which there is definite historical material is the Shang (c. 16th century bc), which had a writing system and a calendar. The Zhou overthrew its Shang rulers in the 11th century bc and ruled until the 3rd century bc. Taoism and Confucianism were founded in this era.

A time of conflict, called the Warring States period, lasted from the 5th century bc until 221 bc, when the Qin (Ch'in) dynasty (from whose name China is derived) was established after its rulers had conquered rival states and created a unified empire. The Han dynasty was established in 206 bc and ruled until ad 220. A time of turbulence followed, and Chinese reunification was not achieved until the Sui dynasty was established in 581.

After the founding of the Song dynasty in 960, the capital was moved to the south because of northern invasions. In 1279 this dynasty was overthrown and Mongol (Yuan) domination began. During this time Marco Polo visited Kublai Khan. The Ming dynasty followed the period of Mongol rule and lasted from 1368 to 1644, cultivating antiforeign feelings to the point that China closed itself off from the rest of the world. Peoples from Manchuria overran China in 1644 and established the Qing (Manchu) dynasty. Ever-increasing incursions by Western and Japanese interests led in the 19th century to the Opium Wars, the Taiping Rebellion, and the Sino-Japanese War, all of which weakened the Manchus.

The dynasty fell in 1911, and a republic was proclaimed in 1912 by Sun Yat-sen. The power struggles of warlords weakened the republic. Under Sun's successor, Chiang Kai-shek, some national unification was achieved in the 1920s, but Chiang soon broke with the Communists, who had formed their own armies. Japan invaded northern China in 1937; its occupation lasted until 1945. The Communists gained support after the Long March (1934–35), in which Mao Zedong emerged as their leader.

Upon Japan's surrender at the end of World War II, a fierce civil war began; in 1949 the Nationalists fled to the island of Taiwan and the Communists proclaimed the People's Republic of China. The Communists undertook extensive reforms, but pragmatic policies alternated with periods of revolutionary upheaval, most notably in the Great Leap Forward and the Cultural Revolution. The anarchy, terror, and economic paralysis of the latter led, after Mao's death in 1976, to a turn to moderation under Deng Xiaoping, who undertook economic reforms and renewed China's ties to the West; the country established diplomatic ties with the US in 1979. The economy has been in transition since the late 1970s, moving from central planning and state-run industries to a mixture of state-owned and private enterprises in manufacturing and services, in the process growing dramatically and transforming Chinese society. The Tiananmen Square incident in 1989 was a challenge to an otherwise increasingly stable political environment after 1980. The death of Deng in 1997 marked the end of a political era, but power passed peacefully to Jiang Zemin. In 1997 Hong Kong reverted to Chinese rule, as did Macao in 1999.

Playing cards are thought to have originated in China in about the 10th century. An Indian origin has been suggested by the resemblance of symbols on some early European decks to the ring, sword, cup, and baton classically depicted in the four hands of Hindu statues. Yet another theory is that cards derived from ancient divinatory procedures used by primitive peoples.

Recent Developments

The Beijing Olympic Games in August 2008 went relatively smoothly. A policy of shifting heavy industry outside Beijing and last-minute traffic-control measures effectively reduced smog levels. Visitors found a modern capital city studded with ambitious architecture, including the Beijing National Stadium, known as the Bird's Nest. It was the location of the Games' opening ceremony, a spectacle that involved some 15,000 performers and celebrated 5,000 years of Chinese cultural achievements. Protest zones where residents could protest if they registered to receive a permit were set up. No permits were granted, however, and 58 foreigners were deported during the Games for protesting. Prior to the Games, the tour of the Olympic torch drew protests around the world in support of Tibetan and human rights.

Despite record high oil prices and the world financial crisis, China's economy continued its rapid expansion in 2008. Economic growth reached 9.0%, and China's trade surplus continued to increase at a record-setting pace. China's foreign-exchange reserves—the world's largest—grew to almost US$1.95 trillion by the end of the year—up to US$1 trillion of which was held in US treasury bills. A dramatic drop in share prices on the Shanghai Stock Exchange, however, combined with a sharp decline in real-estate transactions in major cities and slower growth in industrial output, contributed to fears that the economy would continue to slow down in 2009.

Direct talks between China and Taiwan resumed in 2008 after having been suspended for nearly a decade. Historic agreements on expansion of direct flights and trade between the two were signed in Taipei in November. The Chinese were dismayed by the Russian invasion of Georgia in August and Russia's diplomatic recognition of South Ossetia and Abkhazia, since these acts could create precedents for the diplomatic recognition of Tibet or Taiwan as independent countries. Chinese ties with Africa continued to expand, with bilateral trade hitting US$100 billion during the year.

Background

The Spanish arrived in what is now Colombia c. 1500 and by 1538 had defeated the area's Chibchan-speaking Indians and made the area subject to the Viceroyalty of Peru. After 1740 authority was transferred to the newly created Viceroyalty of New Granada. Parts of Colombia threw off Spanish jurisdiction in 1810, and full independence came after Spain's defeat by Simón Bolívar in 1819. Civil war in 1840 checked development. Conflict between the Liberal and Conservative parties led to the War of a Thousand Days (1899–1903). Years of relative peace followed, but hostility erupted again in 1948; the two parties agreed in 1958 to a scheme for alternating governments. A new constitution was adopted in 1991, but democratic power remained threatened by civil unrest. Many leftist rebels and right-wing paramilitary groups funded their activities through kidnappings and narcotics trafficking.

Recent Developments

The left-wing paramilitary group the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC) suffered several major setbacks in 2008. In March the Colombian military struck a rebel camp in Ecuador, killing senior leader Raúl Reyes and setting off a diplomatic skirmish with Venezuela, Nicaragua, and Ecuador. In May the group revealed that its leader and founding member, Pedro Antonio Marín, had died. In July the Colombian military rescued 15 FARC hostages, including former presidential candidate Ingrid Betancourt. A military operation in September resulted in the killing of a particularly violent FARC commander, Aicardo de Jesús Agudelo. In April 2009 Daniel Rendón Herrera, a drug lord whose organization was thought to be responsible for 3,000 murders since 2008, was captured and extradited to the US, where he was charged with conspiring to support terrorism (for his affiliation with the right-wing paramilitary group the United Self-Defense Groups of Colombia [AUC]) and to import tons of cocaine.

armed security. France provides training for military personnel. Military expenditure as percentage of GDP (2005): 3.5%; per capita expenditure US$21.

Background

The Comoro Islands were known to European navigators from the 16th century. In 1843 France officially took possession of Mayotte and in 1886 placed the other three islands under protection. Subordinated to Madagascar in 1912, Comoros became an overseas territory of France in 1947. In 1961 it was granted autonomy. In 1974 majorities on three of the islands voted for independence, which was granted in 1975. The following decade saw several coup attempts, which culminated in the assassination of the president in 1989. French intervention permitted multiparty elections in 1990, but the country remained in a state of chronic instability. Anjouan and Mohéli seceded from the Comoros federation in 1997. The army took control of the government in 1999. A referendum at the end of 2001 renamed the country the Union of the Comoros and granted the three main islands partially autonomous status.

Recent Developments

In March 2009 the people of Mayotte voted overwhelmingly to become a French overseas department. Once a part of Comoros when ruled by France, Mayotte had voted against independence in 1974. Comoran Pres. Ahmed Abdallah Mohamed Sambi denounced the referendum and called upon Arab leaders to repudiate it. Several protests occurred, and the US State Department issued an alert against travel to Comoros in the immediate aftermath.

Background

Prior to European colonization, several native kingdoms had emerged in the Congo region, including the 16th-century Luba kingdom and the Kuba federation, which reached its peak in the 18th century. European development began late in the 19th century when King Léopold II of Belgium financed Henry Morton Stanley's exploration of the Congo River. The 1884–85 Berlin West Africa Conference recognized the Congo Free State with Léopold as its sovereign. The growing demand for rubber helped finance the exploitation of the Congo, but abuses against native peoples outraged Western nations and forced Léopold to grant the Free State a colonial charter as the Belgian Congo in 1908. Independence was granted in 1960, and the country's name was changed to Zaire in 1971. The postindependence period was marked by unrest, culminating in a military coup that brought Gen. Mobutu Sese Seko to power in 1965. Mismanagement, corruption, and increasing violence devastated the infrastructure and economy. Mobutu was deposed in 1997 by Laurent Kabila, who restored the country's name to Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). Instability in neighboring countries, an influx of refugees from Rwanda, and a desire for Congo's mineral wealth led to military involvement by various African countries. Unrest continued in the early 21st century.

Recent Developments

The savage violence continued in the DRC—rebel militias from several countries remained active there. In March the UN Security Council unanimously called for the immediate and unconditional disarmament and repatriation of all Rwandan rebels in the DRC. That same month, however, Rwandan Pres. Paul Kagame accused the DRC of arming and supplying the Hutu Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda (FDLR). Starting on Christmas Eve in 2008 and continuing into 2009, Ugandan rebels of the Lord's Resistance Army massacred some 865 villagers in the northern DRC, forcing 140,000 Congolese to flee their homes. Fighters from the FDLR continued attacks on DRC soil in 2009, killing at least seven in April. The peacekeeping UN Organization Mission in the DRC (MONUC) saw its mandate extended through 2009 and its approved military component enlarged to almost 20,000 soldiers.

Did you know?

One of Africa's least-explored regions, the northern part of the Republic of the Congo, an area of huge swamps and nearly impenetrable forests, was traversed by foot in 1999. Dr. Michael Fay, an ecologist with the Wildlife Conservation Society, and a team of 12 others undertook a 1,200-mi (1,900-km) survey of this area as well as similar areas in neighboring Gabon. The team concluded that this wilderness is seriously threatened.

Background

In precolonial days the Congo area was home to several thriving kingdoms, including the Kongo, which had its beginnings in the 1st millennium AD. The slave trade began in the 15th century with the arrival of the Portuguese; it supported the local kingdoms and dominated the area until its suppression in the 19th century. The French arrived in the mid-19th century and established treaties with two of the kingdoms, placing them under French protection prior to their becoming part of the colony of French Congo. In 1910 the French possessions were renamed French Equatorial Africa, and Congo became known as Middle (Moyen) Congo. In 1946 Middle Congo became a French overseas territory and in 1958 voted to become an autonomous republic within the French Community. Full independence came two years later. The area has suffered from political instability since independence. Congo's first president was ousted in 1963. A Marxist party, the Congolese Labor Party, gained strength, and in 1968 another coup, led by Maj. Marien Nguabi, created the People's Republic of the Congo. Nguabi was assassinated in 1977, and a series of military rulers followed. Fighting between local militias that began in 1997 badly disrupted the economy, and though a 2003 peace agreement largely ended the conflict, sporadic violence continued.

Recent Developments

In June 2008 a program of disarmament and reintegration of the former rebels known as "Ninjas" was launched in the southern Pool region. There were an estimated 30,000 combatants from the bloody 1998–2003 rebellion eligible for the program. While security had greatly improved in the region, the presence of thousands of former rebels still bearing arms continued to create a volatile situation.

Background

Christopher Columbus landed in Costa Rica in 1502 in an area inhabited by a number of small, independent Indian tribes. These peoples were not easily dominated, and it took almost 60 years for the Spanish to establish a permanent settlement. Ignored by the Spanish crown because of its lack of mineral wealth, the colony grew slowly. Coffee exports and the construction of a rail line improved its economy in the 19th century. It joined the short-lived Mexican Empire in 1821, was a member of the United Provinces of Central America (1823–38), and adopted a constitution in 1871. In 1890 Costa Ricans held what is considered to be the first free and honest election in Central America, beginning a tradition of democracy for which Costa Rica is renowned. In 1987 then president Óscar Arias Sánchez was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. In the early 21st century, many Costa Ricans looked to increasingly free trade with the US as a solution to the country's economic woes.

Recent Developments

International relations dominated Costa Rican news in 2009. Although extremely controversial, the Central America–Dominican Republic Free Trade Agreement (CAFTA–DR) came into force between the US and Costa Rica on 1 January. In March it was announced that the country would restore diplomatic ties with Cuba. Costa Rica and El Salvador had been the only Central American states maintaining the freeze. The next month the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development announced that it was moving Costa Rica off its blacklist of tax havens to a “gray list” of countries that were cooperating but had not yet passed required financial transparency legislation.

Background

Europeans came to the area to trade in ivory and slaves beginning in the 15th century, and local kingdoms gave way to French influence in the 19th century. The French colony of Côte d'Ivoire was founded in 1893, and full occupation took place during 1908–18. In 1946 it became a territory in the French Union. Côte d'Ivoire achieved independence in 1960, when Félix Houphouët-Boigny was elected president. The country's first multiparty presidential elections were held in 1990. In 2002 the country began to fracture politically into north and south, and civil war ensued. A power-sharing agreement was signed in 2007.

Recent Developments

In January 2009 the UN Security Council voted to continue its peacekeeping operations in Côte d'Ivoire's "zone of confidence"—by midyear there were nearly 9,200 uniformed personnel in the force. In May 2008 more than 1,000 former members of the New Forces rebel group had participated in a disarmament ceremony in Bouaké. Public services in the north began reopening as the 2007 peace pact held. In January 2008 post office employees started to clear the five-year mail backlog, and customs officials resumed their duties in the north in May.

Background

The Croats, a southern Slavic people, arrived in the area in the 7th century AD and in the 8th century came under Charlemagne's rule. They converted to Christianity soon afterward and formed a kingdom in the 10th century. Most of Croatia was taken by the Turks in 1526; the rest voted to accept Austrian rule. In 1867 it became part of Austria-Hungary, with Dalmatia and Istria ruled by Vienna and Croatia-Slavonia a Hungarian crown land. In 1918, after the defeat of Austria-Hungary in World War I, it joined other southern Slavic territories to form the Kingdom of Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, renamed Yugoslavia in 1929. During World War II an independent state of Croatia was established by Germany and Italy, embracing Croatia-Slavonia, part of Dalmatia, and Bosnia and Herzegovina; after the war Croatia was rejoined to Yugoslavia as a people's republic. It declared its independence in 1991, sparking insurrections by Croatian Serbs, who carved out autonomous regions with Serbian-led Yugoslav army help; Croatia had taken back most of these regions by 1995. With some stability returning, Croatia's economy began to revive in the late 1990s.

Slovenia led Slovenia to block Croatia's ability to begin those talks. A separate obstacle was the request by the European Commission for Croatia to reform its shipbuilding sector, to which it would be required to cease providing state subsidies upon joining the EU. Shipbuilding accounted for 12–15% of total exports and directly employed more than 11,000 workers, yet five of the six state-owned shipyards were operating at a deficit. In April 2009, however, Croatia, along with Albania, joined NATO, and Croatia was also a nonpermanent member of the UN Security Council for the 2008–09 term.

Background

Several Indian groups, including the Ciboney, the Taino, and the Arawak, inhabited Cuba at the time of the first Spanish contact. Christopher Columbus claimed the island for Spain in 1492, and the Spanish conquest began in 1511, when the settlement of Baracoa was founded. The native Indians were eradicated over the succeeding centuries, and African slaves, from the 18th century until slavery was abolished in 1886, were imported to work the sugar plantations. Cuba revolted unsuccessfully against Spain in the Ten Years' War (1868–78); a second war of independence began in 1895. In 1898 the US entered the war; Spain relinquished its claim to Cuba, which was occupied by the US for three years before gaining its independence in 1902. The US invested heavily in the Cuban sugar industry in the first half of the 20th century, and this, combined with tourism and gambling, caused the economy to prosper. Inequalities in the distribution of wealth persisted, however, as did political corruption. In 1958–59 the communist revolutionary Fidel Castro overthrew Cuba's longtime dictator, Fulgencio Batista, and established a socialist state aligned with the Soviet Union, abolishing capitalism and nationalizing foreign-owned enterprises. Relations with the US deteriorated, reaching a low point with the 1961 Bay of Pigs invasion and the 1962 Cuban missile crisis. In 1980 about 125,000 Cubans, including many that their government officially labeled "undesirables," were shipped to the US in what became known as the "Mariel boatlift." When communism collapsed in the USSR, Cuba lost important financial backing and its economy suffered greatly. The latter gradually improved in the 1990s with the encouragement of tourism, though diplomatic relations with the US were not resumed.

Recent Developments

Fidel Castro officially resigned as president of Cuba in February 2008, thus ending his 49-year tenure as the country's leader. His younger brother and longtime minister of defense, Raúl Castro, was elevated to the presidency, and he stated that the government would embrace a limited path of economic reform. In March the government lifted a ban on buying consumer electronic goods, such as DVD players and cell phones, and dropped a stricture preventing Cubans from staying in the country's top tourist hotels, and in April it introduced a plan allowing thousands of Cubans to receive titles to their homes, eliminated salary caps, and raised pensions for the country's retirees. New US Pres. Barack Obama called for increased dialogue between the US and Cuban governments, and in April 2009, weeks after a US congressional delegation visited the island and met with Fidel, Obama signed a law easing travel restrictions to Cuba for Cuban Americans and allowing for eased remittance transfers.

Cyprus

Two de facto states currently exist on the island of Cyprus: the Republic of Cyprus (ROC), predominantly Greek in character, occupying the southern two-thirds of the island, which is the original and still the internationally recognized de jure government of the whole island; and the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus (TRNC), proclaimed unilaterally 15 Nov 1983, on territory originally secured for the Turkish Cypriot population by the 20 Jul 1974 intervention of Turkey. Only Turkey recognizes the TRNC, and the two ethnic communities have failed to reestablish a single state. Provision of separate data below does not imply recognition of either state's claims but is necessitated by the lack of unified data.

Background

By the late Bronze Age Cyprus had been visited and settled by Mycenaeans and Achaeans, who introduced Greek culture and language, and it became a trading center. By 800 bc Phoenicians had begun to settle there. Ruled over the centuries by the Assyrian, Persian, and Ptolemaic empires, it was annexed by Rome in 58 bc. It was part of the Byzantine Empire in the 4th–12th centuries ad. Cyprus was conquered by the English king Richard I in 1191. A part of the Venetian empire from 1489, it was taken by Ottoman Turks in 1571. In 1878 the British assumed control, and Cyprus became a British crown colony in 1925. It gained independence in 1960. Conflict between Greek and Turkish Cypriots led to the establishment of a UN peacekeeping mission in 1964. In 1974, fearing a movement to unite Cyprus with Greece, Turkish soldiers occupied the northern third of the country, and Turkish Cypriots established a government, which obtained recognition only from Turkey. Conflict has continued to the present, and the UN peacekeeping mission has remained in place. The Republic of Cyprus joined the European Union in 2004 and adopted the euro as its official currency in 2008.

Recent Developments

The political situation on the divided island of Cyprus showed signs of improvement in 2008. The presidents of the two sides agreed on a single sovereignty and a single citizenship. Major negotiations continued throughout the year. The border was increasingly porous, with goods and people crossing in both directions. The two regimes still differed on foreign policy, however. Turkish Cyprus recognized Kosovo's independence—the Greek zone did not share the enthusiasm. On 1 Jan 2008 Greek Cyprus adopted the euro, and the Cyprus pound ceased to be legal tender a month later.

Background

Until 1918 the history of what is now the Czech Republic was largely that of Bohemia. In that year the independent republic of Czechoslovakia was born through the union of Bohemia and Moravia with Slovakia. Czechoslovakia came under the domination of the Soviet Union after World War II, and from 1948 to 1989 it was ruled by a communist government. Its growing political liberalization was suppressed by a Soviet invasion in 1968. After communist rule collapsed in 1989–90, separatist sentiments emerged among the Slovaks, and in 1992 the Czechs and Slovaks agreed to break up their federated state. On 1 Jan 1993 the Czechoslovakian republic was peacefully dissolved and replaced by two new countries, the Czech Republic and Slovakia, with the region of Moravia remaining in the former. In 1999 the Czech Republic entered NATO and in 2004 the EU.

Recent Developments

The proposed radar installation in the Czech Republic, part of a planned US antimissile shield, continued to be a source of contention. Russia, which saw it as a threat, repeatedly protested against the move and vowed to station short-range missiles in its exclave of Kaliningrad in response. In April 2009 US Pres. Barack Obama traveled to Prague, where he said that the missile shield was integral to the defense of Europe against rogue states, such as Iran, but that if the threat of a missile launch from Iran were removed, there would be no need for the missile shield in Europe. This was interpreted as a message to the Russians seeking their help in ending Iran's uranium enrichment and missile projects.

Background

The Danes, a Scandinavian branch of the Teutons, settled the area c. the 6th century AD. During the Viking period the Danes expanded their territory, and by the 11th century the united Danish kingdom included parts of what are now Germany, Sweden, England, and Norway. Scandinavia was united under Danish rule from 1397 until 1523, when Sweden became independent; a series of debilitating wars with Sweden in the 17th century resulted in the Treaty of Copenhagen (1660), which established the modern Scandinavian frontiers. Denmark gained and lost various other territories, including Norway, in the 19th and 20th centuries; it went through three constitutions between 1849 and 1915 and was occupied by Nazi Germany in 1940–45. A founding member of NATO (1949), Denmark adopted its current constitution in 1953. It became a member of the European Community in 1973 and of the EU in 1993, but it negotiated exemptions from certain EU provisions in response to some Danes' concerns regarding environmental protection and social welfare.

Recent Developments

The Muhammad cartoon scandal that sparked virulent anti-Denmark protest across the Muslim world in 2006 reemerged in February 2008. After Danish police arrested three young people—two Tunisians and a Dane of Moroccan origin—suspected of plotting to kill one of the cartoonists behind the satiric drawings, major Danish newspapers, in a show of support for freedom of speech, reprinted the infamous caricatures. This again sparked mass demonstrations by Danish Muslims and scattered protests throughout the Islamic world, culminating in June in a car bomb attack on the Danish embassy in Islamabad, Pakistan, in which six Pakistanis were killed and 30 injured. In an Internet statement, al-Qaeda took responsibility for the blast, warning that further action would ensue if Denmark failed to apologize for publishing the cartoons.

Background

Settled around the 3rd century BC by the Arab ancestors of the Afars, Djibouti was later populated by Somali Issas. In AD 825 Islam was brought to the area by missionaries. Arabs controlled the trade in this region until the 16th century; it became the French protectorate of French Somaliland in 1888. In 1946 it became a French overseas territory, and in 1977 it gained its independence. In the late 20th century, the country received refugees from the Ethiopian-Somali war and from civil conflicts in Eritrea. In the 1990s it suffered from political unrest.

Recent Developments

Djibouti faced a tumultuous year in 2008 as it teetered on the brink of a war with Eritrea. In April Eritrea amassed troops along the Ras Doumeira border area of Djibouti; this action resulted in border skirmishes that led to the deaths of some 35 people, including about 20 Djibouti soldiers. The UN Security Council called on both sides to pull back forces and negotiate, but as of April 2009, Eritrean troops remained on the border.

Background

At the time of the arrival of Christopher Columbus in 1493, Dominica was inhabited by the Caribs. With its steep coastal cliffs and inaccessible mountains, it was one of the last islands to be explored by Europeans, and the Caribs remained in possession until the 18th century; it was then settled by the French and ultimately taken by Britain in 1783. Subsequent hostilities between the settlers and the native inhabitants resulted in the Caribs' near extinction. Incorporated with the Leeward Islands in 1883 and with the Windward Islands in 1940, it became a member of the West Indies Federation in 1958. Dominica became independent in 1978.

Recent Developments

Dominica joined the Bolivarian Alternative for the Americas (ALBA), a group vigorously promoted by Venezuelan Pres. Hugo Chávez, in early 2008. ALBA aimed to promote more government control over the economy and integration among Latin American and Caribbean states. Besides Venezuela, ALBA's membership included Cuba, Bolivia, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines.

Background

The Dominican Republic was originally part of the Spanish colony of Hispaniola. In 1697 the western third of the island, which later became Haiti, was ceded to France; the remainder of the island passed to France in 1795. The eastern two-thirds of the island was returned to Spain in 1809, and the colony declared its independence in 1821. Within a matter of weeks it was overrun by Haitian troops and occupied until 1844. Since then the country has been under the rule of a succession of dictators, except for short interludes of democratic government, and the US has frequently been involved in its affairs. The termination of the dictatorship of Rafael Trujillo in 1961 led to civil war in 1965 and US military intervention. The country frequently suffered from severe hurricanes, as in 1979 and 1998.

Recent Developments

The global economic downturn had a serious impact in 2008 on a country that was heavily dependent on tourism, free trade, remittances from the US, and mining. GDP growth was more than 5%—high by regional standards—but faltering. Contradictions between fiscal performance and quality of life for a large percentage of Dominicans stood out. The neglect of investment in human and physical infrastructure steadily eroded the government's popularity. A survey detailing the decline of public education in Latin America put the Dominican Republic in last place. Public outrage over endemic electrical outages resulted in widespread demonstrations and several deaths. Drug trafficking flourished in a climate of corrupt and weak institutions. Complaints about a profligate election system persisted. Despite food and fuel subsidies, inflation ran at 13%.

Background

The Portuguese first settled on the island of Timor in 1520 and were granted rule over Timor's eastern half in 1860. The Timorese political party Fretilin declared East Timor independent in 1975 after Portugal withdrew its troops. It was invaded by Indonesian forces and was incorporated as a province of Indonesia in 1976. The takeover, which resulted in thousands of East Timorese deaths during the next two decades, was disputed by the UN. In 1999 an independence referendum won overwhelmingly; civilian militias, armed by the military and led by local supporters of integration, then rampaged through the province, killing 1,000–2,000 people. The Indonesian parliament rescinded Indonesia's annexation of the territory, and East Timor was returned to its preannexation status as a non-self-governing territory, though this time under UN supervision. Preparation for independence got under way in 2001, with East Timorese voting by universal suffrage in August for a Constituent Assembly of 88 members. Independence was declared on 20 May 2002 and was followed by the swearing in of Xanana Gusmão as the first president of the country.

Recent Developments

Maj. Alfredo Reinado, leader of a band of disaffected soldiers known as "the petitioners," was said to have been responsible for the 2008 assassination attempt on Pres. José Ramos-Horta. Reinado was killed by the president's security guards during the incident; consequently, motives were hard to determine. The attack led to a security crisis that threatened East Timor's precarious grip on parliamentary democracy.

Background

Ecuador was conquered by the Incas in AD 1450 and came under Spanish control in 1534. Under the Spaniards it was a part of the Viceroyalty of Peru until 1740, when it became a part of the Viceroyalty of New Granada. It gained its independence from Spain in 1822 as part of the republic of Gran Colombia, and in 1830 it became a sovereign state. A succession of authoritarian governments ruled into the mid-20th century, and economic hardship and social unrest prompted the military to take a strong role. Border disputes led to war between Peru and Ecuador in 1941; the two fought periodically until agreeing to a final demarcation in 1998. The economy, booming in the 1970s with petroleum profits, was depressed in the 1980s by reduced oil prices and earthquake damage. A new constitution was adopted in 1979. In the 1990s social unrest caused political instability and several changes of heads of state. In a controversial move to help stabilize the economy, the US dollar replaced the sucre as the national currency in 2000.

Recent Developments

Ecuadorian Pres. Rafael Correa secured popular support for sweeping political change in a referendum held in September 2008. More than 60% of those who voted approved a new constitution that entrenched programs, such as social security benefits for mothers and the self-employed, and increased presidential powers over economic and monetary policy. Strong world prices for oil, Ecuador's principal export, enabled Correa to stimulate the economy with social-spending programs that would provide seeds to farmers and building materials to would-be homeowners. Meanwhile, Correa said that the lease (scheduled to expire in November 2009) allowing the US to conduct anti-drug-trafficking surveillance flights from the Manta air base would not be renewed.

Background

Egypt is home to one of the world's oldest continuous civilizations. Upper and Lower Egypt were united c. 3000 bc, beginning a period of cultural achievement and a line of native rulers that lasted nearly 3,000 years. Egypt's ancient history is divided into the Old, Middle, and New Kingdoms, spanning 31 dynasties and lasting to 332 bc. The pyramids date from the Old Kingdom, the cult of Osiris and the refinement of sculpture from the Middle Kingdom, and the era of empire and the Exodus of the Jews from the New Kingdom. An Assyrian invasion occurred in the 7th century bc, and the Persian Achaemenids established a dynasty in 525 bc. The invasion by Alexander the Great in 332 bc inaugurated the Macedonian Ptolemaic period and the ascendancy of Alexandria. The Romans held Egypt from 30 bc to ad 395; later it was placed under the control of Constantinople. Constantine's granting of tolerance in 313 to the Christians began the development of a formal Egyptian (Coptic) church. Egypt came under Arab control in 642 and ultimately was transformed into an Arabic-speaking state, with Islam as the dominant religion. Held by the Umayyad and Abbasid dynasties, in 969 it became the center of the Fatimid dynasty. In 1250 the Mamluks established a dynasty that lasted until 1517, when Egypt fell to the Ottoman Turks. An economic decline ensued, and with it a decline in Egyptian culture. Egypt became a British protectorate in 1914 and received nominal independence in 1922, when a constitutional monarchy was established. A coup overthrew the monarchy in 1952, with Gamal Abdel Nasser taking power. Following three wars with Israel, Egypt, under Nasser's successor, Anwar el-Sadat, ultimately played a leading role in Middle East peace talks. Sadat was succeeded by Hosni Mubarak, who followed Sadat's peace initiatives and in 1982 regained Egyptian sovereignty (lost in 1967) over the Sinai Peninsula. Although Egypt took part in the coalition against Iraq during the Persian Gulf War (1991), it later made peace overtures to Iraq and other countries in the region.

Recent Developments

Egypt experienced an unprecedented surge in 2008 in the political involvement of its citizens, whose activities flouted limitations imposed since 1981 by the state of emergency. Rising food prices, unemployment, the poor quality of health services and education, and charges of nepotism and corruption were among the many grievances, and there was support for the breakout of the besieged population of Gaza into Egypt. A strike in April by textile workers marked a watershed in civil political action. An estimated 25,000 workers and thousands of irate supporters staged a preannounced strike to protest the government's failure to honor a promise for an improved compensation package.

Background

The Spanish arrived in the area in 1524 and subjugated the Pipil Indian kingdom of Cuzcatlán by 1539. The country was divided into two districts, San Salvador and Sonsonate, both attached to Guatemala. When independence came in 1821, San Salvador was incorporated into the Mexican Empire; upon its collapse in 1823, Sonsonate and San Salvador combined to form the new state of El Salvador within the United Provinces of Central America. From its founding, El Salvador experienced a high degree of political turmoil and was under military rule from 1931 to 1979, when the government was ousted in a coup. Elections held in 1982 set up a new government, and in 1983 a new constitution was adopted, but civil war continued through the 1980s. An accord in 1992 brought an uneasy truce.

Recent Developments

El Salvador enjoyed economic growth of 7.5% in 2008. Rising foreign trade and remittances from Salvadorans in the United States accounted for much of this success. Although the Central America–Dominican Republic Free Trade Agreement (CAFTA–DR) had not provided all the benefits that the government promised, it had increased trade with the US and the Dominican Republic. Separate trade agreements with Chile, Mexico, Panama, and Taiwan had further expanded Salvadoran trade, and negotiations with Caricom (Caribbean Community and Common Market), Canada, Israel, and the European Union promised additional growth. The global economic downturn, however, slowed the economy in late 2008.

Background

The first inhabitants of the mainland region appear to have been Pygmies. The now-prominent Fang and Bubi reached the mainland region in the 17th-century Bantu migrations. Equatorial Guinea was ceded by the Portuguese to the Spanish in the late 18th century; it was frequented by slave traders, as well as by British, German, Dutch, and French merchants. Independence was declared in 1968, followed by a reign of terror and economic chaos under the dictatorial president Macías Nguema, who was overthrown by a military coup in 1979 and later executed. A new constitution was adopted in 1982, but political unrest persisted into the 21st century despite the country's oil wealth.

Recent Developments

Equatorial Guinea continued to be Africa's third largest oil producer (after Nigeria and Angola) in 2008. A pressing issue was the maritime border dispute with Gabon over the island of Mbanie in the Gulf of Guinea, where oil had been discovered. The UN appointed a Swiss legal expert to try to resolve the dispute. New attention was focused on Equatorial Guinea when British mercenary Simon Mann—who was accused of having led a coup in 2004 to topple Pres. Teodoro Obiang Nguema Mbasogo—was extradited secretly from Zimbabwe, where he had served four years in prison. Mann was put on trial in Malabo, and the proceedings were broadcast internationally. He revealed new details about the failed coup attempt, implicating the son of former British prime minister Margaret Thatcher and claiming that Spain, South Africa, and the United States knew of the plot and approved it.

Background

As the site of the main ports of the Aksumite empire, Eritrea was linked to the beginnings of the Ethiopian kingdom, but it retained much of its independence until it came under Ottoman rule in the 16th century. From the 17th to the 19th centuries, control of the territory was disputed between Ethiopia, the Ottomans, the kingdom of Tigray, Egypt, and Italy; it became an Italian colony in 1890. Eritrea was used as the base for the Italian invasions of Ethiopia (1896 and 1935–36) and in 1936 became part of Italian East Africa. It was captured by the British in 1941, federated to Ethiopia in 1952, and made a province of Ethiopia in 1962. Thirty years of guerrilla warfare by Eritrean secessionist groups ensued. A provisional Eritrean government was established in 1991, and independence came in 1993. A border war with Ethiopia that began in 1998 ended in an Ethiopian victory in 2000.

Recent Developments

Eritrea entered into another frontier dispute in 2008, this time with its neighbor Djibouti. In June soldiers of the two countries clashed along their undemarcated border, leading to more than 30 deaths. The fighting came as the UN prepared to disband a mission aimed at preserving a fragile cease-fire between Eritrea and Ethiopia. The UN, which had earlier complained that Eritrea had cut off fuel supplies to the mission (which had arrived in December 2000 to keep the peace after a deal was reached to end a two-year war in which 70,000 lives were lost), completed the pullout in July.

Background

The lands on the eastern shores of the Baltic Sea were invaded by Vikings in the 9th century AD, but the Estonians were able to withstand the assaults until the Danes took control in 1219. In 1346 the Danes sold their sovereignty to the Teutonic Order, which was then in possession of Livonia (southern Estonia and Latvia). In the mid-16th century Estonia was once again divided, with northern Estonia capitulating to Sweden and Poland gaining Livonia, which it surrendered to Sweden in 1629. Russia acquired Livonia and Estonia in 1721. Serfdom was abolished, and from 1881 Estonia underwent intensive Russification. In 1918 Estonia obtained independence from Russia, which lasted until the Soviet Union occupied the country in 1940 and forcibly incorporated it into the USSR. Germany held the region (1941–44) during World War II, but the Soviet regime was restored in 1944, after which Estonia's economy was collectivized and integrated into that of the Soviet Union. In 1991, along with other parts of the former USSR, it proclaimed its independence and subsequently held elections. Estonia continued negotiations with Russia to settle their common border, and, along with the other Baltic states, Estonia joined the EU and NATO in 2004.

Recent Developments

After nearly a decade of rapid growth, Estonia suffered a sharp economic downturn and the onset of a recession in 2008, further magnified by the global financial crisis late in the year. The inflation rate reached double digits, which made adoption of the euro—a key government goal—unlikely before 2011.

Background

Ethiopia, the Biblical land of Cush, was inhabited from earliest antiquity and was once under ancient Egyptian rule. Ge'ez-speaking agriculturalists established the kingdom of Da'amat in the 2nd millennium bc. After 300 bc they were superseded by the kingdom of Aksum, whose King Menilek I, according to legend, was the son of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. Christianity was introduced in the 4th century ad and became widespread. Ethiopia's prosperous Mediterranean trade was cut off by the Muslim Arabs in the 7th and 8th centuries, and the area's interests were directed eastward. Contact with Europe resumed in the late 15th century with the arrival of the Portuguese. Modern Ethiopia began with the reign of Tewodros II, who began the consolidation of the country. In the wake of European encroachment, the coastal region was made an Italian colony in 1890, but under Emperor Menilek II the Italians were defeated and ousted in 1896. Ethiopia prospered under his rule, and his modernization programs were continued by Emperor Haile Selassie in the 1930s. In 1936 Italy again gained control of the country, and it was held as part of Italian East Africa until 1941, when it was liberated by the British. Ethiopia incorporated Eritrea in 1952. In 1974 Haile Selassie was deposed, and a Marxist government, plagued by civil wars and famine, controlled the country until 1991. In 1993 Eritrea gained its independence, but there were continuing border conflicts with it and neighboring Somalia into the 21st century.

Recent Developments

The Ethiopian economy was estimated to have grown at the vibrant rate of 11.6% in 2008, marking four straight years of double-digit growth. Most exports came from the agricultural sector, particularly coffee (exports grew by 40% in 2008), tea, spices, cereals, pulses, oilseeds, flowers, fruits, and vegetables. Whereas tourism and other aspects of the economy continued to grow in 2008, inflation and rising prices on consumer goods strained the government's ability to meet local demand. In early 2009 Ethiopia completed the withdrawal of thousands of troops in Somalia that had been supporting the Transitional Federal Government against insurgents since late 2006.

Background

Archaeological evidence shows that the islands of Fiji were occupied in the late 2nd millennium bc. The first European sighting was by the Dutch in the 17th century; in 1774 the islands were visited by Capt. James Cook, who found a mixed Melanesian-Polynesian population with a complex society. Traders and the first missionaries arrived in 1835. In 1857 a British consul was appointed, and in 1874 Fiji was proclaimed a crown colony. It became independent as a member of the Commonwealth in 1970 and was declared a republic in 1987 following a military coup. Elections in 1992 restored civilian rule. A new constitution was approved in 1997. Coups in 2000 and 2006 created continuing political instability.

Recent Developments

A standoff between Fiji's interim government and its Pacific neighbors continued throughout 2008. The interim military leadership insisted that the objectives of the 2006 coup—the elimination of institutional corruption and the adoption of a People's Charter—should precede general elections tentatively scheduled for early 2009 and the return of an elected government. The Pacific Islands Forum, a regional organization headquartered in Fiji and of which Fiji was a founding member, suspended Fiji's membership after a deadline to publish a schedule for the election passed in May 2009.

Background

Recent archaeological discoveries have led some to suggest that human habitation in Finland dates back at least 100,000 years. Ancestors of the Sami apparently were present in Finland by about 7000 bc. The ancestors of the present-day Finns came from the southern shore of the Gulf of Finland in the 1st millennium bc. The area was gradually Christianized from the 11th century. From the 12th century Sweden and Russia contested for supremacy in Finland, but by 1323 Sweden ruled most of the country. Russia was ceded part of Finnish territory in 1721; in 1808 Alexander I of Russia invaded Finland, which in 1809 was formally ceded to Russia. The subsequent period saw the growth of Finnish nationalism. Russia's losses in World War I and the Russian Revolution of 1917 set the stage for Finland's independence in 1917. It was defeated by the Soviet Union in the Russo-Finnish War (1939–40) but then sided with Nazi Germany against the Soviets during World War II and regained the territory it had lost. Facing defeat again by the advancing Soviets in 1944, it reached a peace agreement with the USSR, ceding territory and paying reparations. Finland's economy recovered after World War II. It joined the EU in 1995.

1 metric ton = about 1.1 short tons; 1 kilometer = 0.6 mi (statute); 1 metric ton-km cargo = about 0.68 short ton-mi cargo; c.i.f.: cost, insurance, and freight; f.o.b.: free on board

Recent Developments

Although the Finnish economy remained relatively strong, the global financial crisis negatively affected it. In 2008 unemployment dropped half a percent to 6.4% and the economy grew by 3.6%, but this was half the growth rate of the previous two years, and exports and foreign investment stagnated. Key indicators began to fall in the second half of the year, and by March 2009 unemployment had jumped to 8.3%. Former president (1994–2000) and career diplomat Martti Ahtisaari in October 2008 was awarded the Nobel Prize for Peace.

Background

Archaeological excavations in France indicate continuous settlement from Paleolithic times. About 1200 bc the Gauls migrated into the area, and in 600 bc Ionian Greeks established several settlements, including one at Marseille. Julius Caesar completed the Roman conquest of Gaul in 50 bc. During the 6th century ad, the Salian Franks ruled; by the 8th century power had passed to the Carolingians, the greatest of whom was Charlemagne. The Hundred Years' War (1337–1453) resulted in the return to France of land that had been held by the British; by the end of the 15th century, France approximated its modern boundaries. The 16th century was marked by the Wars of Religion between Protestants (Huguenots) and Roman Catholics. Henry IV's Edict of Nantes (1598) granted substantial religious toleration, but this was revoked in 1685 by Louis XIV, who helped to raise monarchical absolutism to new heights. In 1789 the French Revolution proclaimed the rights of the individual and destroyed the ancien régime. Napoleon ruled from 1799 to 1814, after which a limited monarchy was restored until 1871, when the Third Republic was created. World War I (1914–18) ravaged the northern part of France. After Nazi Germany's invasion during World War II, the collaborationist Vichy regime governed. Liberated by Allied and Free French forces in 1944, France restored parliamentary democracy under the Fourth Republic. A costly war in Indochina and rising nationalism in French colonies during the 1950s overwhelmed the Fourth Republic. The Fifth Republic was established in 1958 under Charles de Gaulle, who presided over the dissolution of most of France's overseas colonies. In 1981 François Mitterrand became France's first elected Socialist president. During the 1990s the French government, balancing right- and left-wing forces, moved toward solidifying European unity.

Recent Developments

The legislature gave the necessary 60% majority approval to constitutional reforms supported by French Pres. Nicolas Sarkozy that would give the Assembly more power, including the right to be informed within three days of any foreign military operation and the right to veto any such operation lasting more than four months. The reforms also limited the president's tenure to two five-year terms. Sarkozy pushed on with his economic reforms even as France began to feel the effects of the international credit crisis. Legislation was passed to encourage people to work more (by allowing more overtime beyond the standard 35-hour workweek) and longer (by offering incentives for older people to stay in the workforce). In March 2009 the government announced that it would provide compensation to surviving participants of France's nuclear testing from the 1960s to the 1990s. French foreign and defense policies during 2008 were marked by a further shift toward the US and NATO. The improvement in relations with Washington, begun during Sarkozy's successful 2007 trip to the US, continued as the French president kept to his tough line toward Iran and friendly tone to Israel and as a result of his decisions on NATO and Afghanistan. Sarkozy broadly endorsed a high-level military commission's recommendations in June for big troop and base cuts (with financial savings going into better equipment), more stress on intelligence, and the reintegration of French forces into NATO's military command. There was political resistance, however, and Sarkozy made France's reintegration into NATO conditional on parallel improvement in EU military cooperation. France was the only European member of NATO to send reinforcements to Afghanistan in 2008, transporting 800 additional troops.

Background

Artifacts dating from late Paleolithic and early Neolithic times have been found in Gabon, but it is not known when the Bantu speakers who established Gabon's ethnic composition arrived. Pygmies were probably the original inhabitants. The Fang arrived in the late 18th century and were followed by the Portuguese and by French, Dutch, and English traders. The slave trade dominated commerce in the 18th and much of the 19th century. The French then took control, and Gabon was administered (1843–86) with French West Africa. In 1886 the colony of French Congo was established to include both Gabon and the Congo; in 1910 Gabon became a separate colony within French Equatorial Africa. An overseas territory of France from 1946, it became an autonomous republic within the French Community in 1958 and declared its independence in 1960. Rule by a sole political party was established in the 1960s, but discontent with it led to riots in Libreville in 1989. Legalization of opposition parties led to new elections in 1990. The country continued to face economic difficulties despite large revenues from petroleum exports.

Recent Developments

Under the auspices of the UN, diplomats from Gabon and Equatorial Guinea met in New York City in June 2008 to negotiate a long-standing dispute over ownership of oil-rich Mbanie island. In 2009 the government planned to open up some 100,000 sq km (40,000 sq mi) of offshore territory for oil exploration.

Background

Beginning about the 13th century AD, the Wolof, Malinke, and Fulani peoples settled in different parts of what is now The Gambia and established villages and then kingdoms in the region. European exploration began when the Portuguese sighted the Gambia River in 1455. Britain and France both settled in the area in the 17th century. The British Ft. James, on an island about 20 mi (32 km) from the river's mouth, was an important collection point for the slave trade. In 1783 the Treaty of Versailles reserved the Gambia River for Britain. After the British abolished slavery in 1807, they built a fort at the mouth of the river to block the continuing slave trade. In 1889 The Gambia's boundaries were agreed upon by Britain and France; the British declared a protectorate over the area in 1894. Independence was proclaimed in 1965, and The Gambia became a republic within the Commonwealth in 1970. It formed a limited confederation with Senegal in 1982 that was dissolved in 1989. During the 1990s the government was in turmoil.

Recent Developments

When rising world food and oil prices began to have a serious impact on the economy in 2008, Pres. Yahya Jammeh called on Gambians to work for food self-sufficiency. Human rights monitors continued to express concern about numerous infringements of press freedom in the country.

Background

Ancient Georgia was the site of the kingdoms of Iberia and Colchis, whose fabled wealth was known to the ancient Greeks. The area was part of the Roman Empire by 65 bc and became Christian in ad 337. For the next three centuries it was involved in the conflicts between the Byzantine and Persian empires; after 654 it was controlled by Arab caliphs, who established an emirate in Tbilisi. It was controlled by the Bagratids from the 8th to the 12th century, and the zenith of Georgia's power was reached in the reign of Queen Tamara, whose realm stretched from Azerbaijan to Circassia, forming a pan-Caucasian empire. Invasions by Mongols and Turks in the 13th and 14th centuries disintegrated the kingdom, and the fall of Constantinople (now Istanbul) to the Ottoman Turks in 1453 isolated it from Western Christendom. The next three centuries saw repeated invasions by the Armenians, Turks, and Persians. Georgia sought Russian protection in 1783, and in 1801 it was annexed to Russia. After the Russian Revolution of 1917, the area was briefly independent; in 1921 a Soviet regime was installed, and in 1936 Georgia became the Georgian SSR, a full member of the Soviet Union. In 1990 a noncommunist coalition came to power in the first free elections ever held in Soviet Georgia, and in 1991 Georgia declared independence. In the 1990s, while Pres. Eduard Shevardnadze tried to steer a middle course, internal dissension resulted in conflicts with the northwestern republic of Abkhazia and the northern republic of South Ossetia, and external distrust of Russian motives in the area grew. In 1992 Abkhazia reinstated its 1925 constitution and declared independence, which Georgia refused to recognize.

Recent Developments

Tensions between the Georgian government and the breakaway republics of Abkhazia and South Ossetia increased in 2008. Following several weeks of sporadic exchanges of gunfire between Georgian troops and rebel forces in South Ossetia, Georgian troops entered the republic on 7 August. In response, Russian tanks and troops advanced into South Ossetia on 8 August, bombed the port of Poti and several military bases, and occupied Gori. Several hundred servicemen and civilians died during the fighting, and tens of thousands were forced to flee their homes. Following the deployment of EU observers in October, Russian troops withdrew from the conflict zones. Although Georgia was not offered a NATO membership action plan in 2008, NATO exercises were held in Georgia in May 2009.

Background

Germanic tribes entered the region about the 2nd century bc, displacing the Celts. The Romans failed to conquer the region, which became a political entity only with the division of the Carolingian empire in the 9th century ad. The monarchy's control was weak, and power increasingly devolved upon the nobility, organized in feudal states. The monarchy was restored under Saxon rule in the 10th century, and the Holy Roman Empire, centering on Germany and northern Italy, was revived. Continuing conflict between the Holy Roman emperors and the Roman Catholic popes undermined the empire, and its dissolution was accelerated by Martin Luther's revolt in 1517, which divided Germany, and ultimately Europe, into Protestant and Roman Catholic camps, culminating in the Thirty Years' War (1618–48). Germany's population and borders were greatly reduced, and its numerous feudal princes gained virtually full sovereignty. In 1862 Otto von Bismarck came to power in Prussia and over the next decade reunited Germany in the German Empire. It was dissolved in 1918 after the German defeat in World War I. Germany was stripped of much of its territory and all of its colonies. In 1933 Adolf Hitler became chancellor and established a totalitarian state, the Third Reich, dominated by the Nazi Party. Hitler's invasion of Poland in 1939 plunged the world into World War II. Following its defeat in 1945, Germany was divided by the Allied Powers into four zones of occupation. Disagreement with the USSR over the reunification of the zones led to the creation in 1949 of the Federal Republic of Germany (West Germany) and the German Democratic Republic (East Germany). Berlin, the former capital, remained divided. West Germany became a prosperous parliamentary democracy and East Germany a one-party state under Soviet control. The East German Communist government was brought down peacefully in 1989, and Germany was reunited in 1990. After the initial euphoria over unity, the former West Germany sought to incorporate the former East Germany both politically and economically, resulting in heavy financial burdens for the wealthier western Germans. The country continued to move toward deeper political and economic integration with Western Europe through its membership in the European Union.

Recent Developments

Western countries such as the UK and the US demanded in 2008 that Berlin take on more military responsibility in international conflicts. After World War II, it was clear in the collective German mind that there would never again be a German military presence, and by 2008 young Germans found it difficult to even contemplate that military force might be a solution in any conflict. Moreover, the suggestion that Germany should provide troops, as opposed to giving financial aid or noncombatant support within the remit of a peacekeeping force, triggered immediate public disapproval. In October, after months of pressure from NATO, the Bundestag agreed to send 1,000 additional troops to Afghanistan and to extend the mission there by 14 months, but Berlin still resisted transferring German forces from the relative peace in northern Afghanistan to the war-torn south. By mid-2009 Germany had roughly 3,800 troops in the country.

Background

The modern state of Ghana is named after the ancient Ghana empire that flourished until the 13th century ad in the western Sudan, about 800 km (500 mi) northwest of the modern state. The Akan peoples then founded their first states in modern Ghana. Gold-seeking Mande traders arrived by the 14th century, and Hausa merchants arrived by the 16th century. During the 15th century the Mande founded the states of Dagomba and Mamprussi in the northern half of the region. The Asante, an Akan people, originated in the central forest region and formed a strongly centralized empire that was at its height in the 18th and 19th centuries. European exploration of the region began early in the 15th century, when the Portuguese landed on the Gold Coast; they later established a settlement at Elmina as headquarters for the slave trade. By the mid-18th century the Gold Coast was dominated by numerous forts controlled by Dutch, British, and Danish merchants. Britain made the Gold Coast a crown colony in 1874, and British protectorates over Asante and the northern territories were established in 1901. In 1957 the Gold Coast became the independent state of Ghana.

Recent Developments

Although Ghana in 2008 enjoyed unhampered prosperity owing to an economic boom, reigned as the world's second largest cocoa producer and Africa's second largest gold producer, and was looking forward to the start of offshore oil production in 2010, there was rising public anger over the inflation (about 17%) in the price of food and fuel imports. Additional concerns involved disputes over land rights and sporadic ethnic clashes, especially in the northern region.

Background

The earliest urban society in Greece was the palace-centered Minoan civilization, which reached its height on Crete c. 2000 bc. It was succeeded by the mainland Mycenaean civilization, which arose c. 1600 bc following a wave of Indo-European invasions. About 1200 bc a second wave of invasions destroyed the Bronze Age cultures, and a dark age followed, known mostly through the epics of Homer. At the end of this time, classical Greece began to emerge (c. 750 bc) as a collection of independent city-states, including Sparta in the Peloponnese and Athens in Attica. The civilization reached its zenith after repelling the Persians at the beginning of the 5th century bc and began to decline after the civil strife of the Peloponnesian War at the century's end. In 338 bc the Greek city-states were taken over by Philip II of Macedon, and Greek culture was spread by Philip's son Alexander the Great throughout his empire. The Romans, themselves heavily influenced by Greek culture, conquered the Greek states in the 2nd century bc. After the fall of Rome, Greece remained part of the Byzantine Empire until the mid-15th century, when it became part of the expanding Ottoman Empire; it gained its independence in 1832. It was occupied by Nazi Germany during World War II. Civil war followed and lasted until 1949, when communist forces were defeated. In 1952 Greece joined NATO. A military junta ruled the country from 1967 to 1974, when democracy was restored and a referendum declared an end to the Greek monarchy. In 1981 Greece joined the European Community, the first Eastern European country to do so. Upheavals in the Balkans in the 1990s strained Greece's relations with some neighboring states, notably the former Yugoslav entity that took the name Republic of Macedonia.

Recent Developments

In January 2008 Konstantinos (Kostas) Karamanlis became the first Greek prime minister since 1959 to pay an official visit to Turkey, where both sides pledged to "open a new page" in their relations. Foreign policy was dominated, however, by the ongoing dispute with Macedonia over that country's name, and Greece vetoed Macedonia's accession to NATO after no resolution had been found. The Greek economy was hurt by the global economic crisis, with GDP growing by 6.5% but inflation reaching 4.4% and unemployment rising to 7.9%. In April 2009 a European Commission report predicted that GDP would fall by 0.9% in 2009.

Background

The Inuit probably crossed to Greenland from North America, along the islands of the Canadian Arctic, from 4000 BC to AD 1000. The Norwegian Erik the Red visited Greenland in 982; his son, Leif Eriksson, introduced Christianity. Greenland came under joint Danish-Norwegian rule in the late 14th century. The original Norse settlements became extinct in the 15th century, but Greenland was recolonized by Denmark. In 1776 Denmark closed the Greenland coast to foreign trade; it was not reopened until 1950. Greenland became part of Denmark in 1953. Home rule was established in 1979. In the early 21st century, the movement for full independence gained support, as did the belief that global warming was responsible for the accelerated melting of the Greenlandic ice.

Recent Developments

In May 2008 Ilulissat, Greenland, was the site of an international summit on Arctic sovereignty attended by official representatives from Canada, Denmark, Norway, Russia, and the US. The Ilulissat Declaration, released at the end of the summit, provided a legal framework for Arctic development. In November the electorate in Greenland voted resoundingly in favor of greater autonomy from Denmark.

Background

The warlike Carib Indians dominated Grenada when Christopher Columbus sighted the island in 1498 and named it Concepción; they ruled it for the next 150 years. In 1674 it became subject to the French crown and remained so until 1762, when British forces captured it. In 1833 the island's black slaves were freed. Grenada was the headquarters of the government of the British Windward Islands (1885–1958) and a member of the West Indies Federation (1958–62). It became a self-governing state in association with Britain in 1967 and gained its independence in 1974. In 1979 a left-wing government took control in a bloodless coup. Relations with its US-oriented Latin American neighbors became strained as Grenada leaned toward Cuba and the Soviet bloc. In order to counteract this trend, the US invaded the island in 1983; democratic self-government was reestablished in 1984. Grenada's relations with Cuba, once suspended, were restored in 1997.

Recent Developments

In early 2008 a receiver was appointed to take over the operations of Grenada's Capital Bank International because of the bank's "failure" to accede to withdrawal requests by customers, raising questions about its solvency.

Background

From simple farming villages dating to 2500 bc, the Maya of Guatemala and the Yucatán developed an impressive civilization. The civilization of the Maya declined after ad 900, and the Spanish began the subjugation of their descendants in 1523. The Central American colonies declared independence from Spain in Guatemala City in 1821, and Guatemala became part of the Mexican Empire until its collapse in 1823. In 1839 Guatemala became an independent republic under the first of a series of dictators who held power almost continuously for the next century. In 1945 a liberal-democratic coalition came to power and instituted sweeping reforms. Attempts to expropriate land belonging to American business interests prompted the US government in 1954 to sponsor an invasion. In the following years Guatemala's social revolution came to an end and most of the reforms were reversed. Chronic political instability and violence thenceforth marked Guatemalan politics; most of the 200,000 deaths that resulted were blamed on government forces. In 1991 the country abandoned its long-standing claims of sovereignty over Belize, and the two established diplomatic relations. It continued to experience violence as guerrillas sought to seize power. A peace treaty was signed in 1996, and the country started slowly to recover from its civil war.

Recent Developments

Following his inauguration on 14 Jan 2008, Guatemalan Pres. Álvaro Colom launched an ambitious program of social reform. A Council of Social Cohesion, headed by his wife, Sandra Torres de Colom, coordinated educational and economic benefits for the rural poor. By July Colom had improved access to drinking water, health care, and education, and he had initiated hydroelectric and thermal-energy projects. Guatemala opened trade with India and China and negotiated new trade agreements with the EU and Brazil. Remittances from Guatemalans abroad (mostly in the US) remained crucially important.

Background

About AD 900 successive migrations of the Susu swept down from the desert and pushed the original inhabitants of Guinea, the Baga, to the Atlantic coast. Small kingdoms of the Susu rose in importance in the 13th century and later extended their rule to the coast. In the mid-15th century the Portuguese visited the coast and developed a slave trade. In the 16th century the Fulani established domination over the Fouta Djallon region; they ruled into the 19th century. In the early 19th century the French arrived and in 1849 proclaimed the coastal region a French protectorate. In 1895 French Guinea became part of the federation of French West Africa. In 1946 it was made an overseas territory of France, and in 1958 it achieved independence. Following a military coup in 1984, Guinea began implementing Westernized government systems. A new constitution was adopted in 1991, and the first multiparty elections were held in 1993. During the 1990s Guinea accommodated several hundred thousand war refugees from neighboring Liberia and Sierra Leone.

Recent Developments

Pres. Lansana Conté, leader of Guinea for almost 25 years, died on 22 Dec 2008. A military coup quickly followed, prompting international condemnation, including suspension from the African Union that month and from the Economic Community of West African States in January 2009. The US also suspended all nonhumanitarian aid until the resumption of civilian rule.

Background

More than 1,000 years ago the coast of Guinea-Bissau was occupied by iron-using agriculturists. They grew irrigated and dry rice and were also the major suppliers of marine salt to the western Sudan. At about the same time, the region came under the influence of the Mali empire and became a tributary kingdom known as Gabú. After 1546 Gabú was virtually autonomous; vestiges of the kingdom lasted until 1867. The earliest overseas contacts came in the 15th century with the Portuguese, who imported slaves from the Guinea area to the offshore Cape Verde Islands. Portuguese control of Guinea-Bissau was marginal despite claims to sovereignty there. The end of the slave trade forced the Portuguese inland in search of new profits. Their subjugation of the interior was slow and sometimes violent; it was not effectively achieved until 1915, though sporadic resistance continued until 1936.

Guerrilla warfare in the 1960s led to the country's independence in 1974, but political turmoil continued and the government was overthrown by a military coup in 1980. A new constitution was adopted in 1984, and the first multiparty elections were held in 1994. A destructive civil war in 1998 was followed by a military coup in 1999 and another in 2003.

Recent Developments

A failed coup occurred in Guinea-Bissau in 2008, and its alleged leader, the head of the country's navy, escaped by sea but was soon arrested in The Gambia. Another apparent coup attempt followed the November legislative election, with Pres. João Bernardo Vieira surviving an attack at his home by mutinous soldiers. In March 2009, however, army chief of staff and Vieira rival Gen. Tagme Na Waie was killed in a bombing, and only hours later President Vieira was shot dead, allegedly by the military.

Background

Guyana was colonized by the Dutch in the 17th century. During the Napoleonic Wars the British occupied the territory and afterward purchased the colonies of Demerara, Berbice, and Essequibo, united in 1831 as British Guiana. The slave trade was abolished in 1807, but emancipation of the 100,000 slaves in the colonies was not completed until 1838. From the 1840s East Indian and Chinese indentured servants were brought to work the plantations; by 1917 almost 240,000 East Indians had migrated to British Guiana. It was made a crown colony in 1928 and granted home rule in 1953. Political parties began to emerge, developing on racial lines as the People's Progressive Party (largely East Indian) and the People's National Congress (largely black). The PNC formed a coalition government and led the country into independence as Guyana in 1966. In 1970 Guyana became a republic within the Commonwealth; in 1980 it adopted a new constitution. Venezuela has long claimed land west of the Essequibo River, and the UN continued to arbitrate the issue in the early 21st century.

Background

Haiti gained its independence when the former slaves of the island rebelled against French rule in 1791–1804. The new republic encompassed the entire island of Hispaniola, but the eastern portion was restored to Spain in 1809. The island was reunited under Haitian Pres. Jean-Pierre Boyer (1818–43); after his overthrow the eastern portion revolted and formed the Dominican Republic. Haiti's government was marked by instability, with frequent coups and assassinations. It was occupied by the US in 1915–34. In 1957 the dictator François ("Papa Doc") Duvalier came to power. Despite an economic decline and civil unrest, Duvalier ruled until his death in 1971. He was succeeded by his son, Jean-Claude ("Baby Doc") Duvalier, who was forced into exile in 1986. Haiti's first free presidential elections, held in 1990, were won by Jean-Bertrand Aristide. He was deposed by a military coup in 1991, after which tens of thousands of Haitians attempted to flee to the US in small boats. The military government stepped down in 1994, and Aristide returned from exile and resumed the presidency. Economic and political instability continued to plague Haiti in the early 21st century.

Recent Developments

Skyrocketing food and fuel prices hit Haiti hard in 2008, owing to dependence on costly imports in a country where 78% of the population lived on less than US$2 a day. Resilient crime, especially urban kidnapping, and the government's inability to improve material conditions of the population dampened hopes for a brighter future. Remittances, reaching US$1.83 billion, or 30% of GDP, in 2007, were expected to stagnate or decline. A new coalition government led by Michèle Pierre-Louis, a respected educator and social activist, confronted a country ravaged by two hurricanes and two tropical storms within a 23-day period (16 August–7 September). The storms displaced hundreds of thousands of people, left 800 dead, and caused massive food deficits, thus setting back national efforts to address dependence on costly imported rice. The renewal in mid-October of the one-year mandate of the UN Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH) offered relief, however, particularly in view of its capabilities in disaster response and in reinforcing public safety.

Background

Early residents of Honduras were part of the Mayan civilization that flourished in the 1st millennium AD. Christopher Columbus reached Honduras in 1502, and permanent settlement followed. A major war between the Spanish and the Indians broke out in 1537, culminating in the decimation of the Indian population through disease and enslavement. After 1570 Honduras was part of the captaincy general of Guatemala until Central American independence in 1821. Part of the United Provinces of Central America, Honduras withdrew in 1838 and declared its independence. In the 20th century, under military rule, there was constant civil war and some intervention by the US. A civilian government assumed office in 1982. The military remained in the background, however, as the activity of leftist guerrillas increased.

Recent Developments

To counter rising oil prices, in 2008 Honduras joined PetroCaribe, which enabled it to receive petroleum from Venezuela at a reduced price. Tegucigalpa also negotiated agreements that would allow Hondurans to work in Canada and Spain legally.

Background

The island of Hong Kong and adjacent islets were ceded by China to the British in 1842, and the Kowloon Peninsula and the New Territories were later leased by the British from China for 99 years (1898–1997). A joint Chinese-British declaration, signed on 19 Dec 1984, paved the way for the entire territory to be returned to China, which occurred on 1 Jul 1997.

Recent Developments

Hong Kong, whose stock market was a leading indicator of Asian financial health, was negatively affected by the global financial crisis in the second half of 2008. The economy grew only 2.5% for the year, and it contracted 2.6% in the fourth quarter compared to the same period in 2007. By April 2009 unemployment had reached 5.1%.

Background

The western part of Hungary was incorporated into the Roman Empire in 14 bc. The Magyars, a nomadic people, occupied the middle basin of the Danube River in the late 9th century ad. Stephen I, crowned in 1000, Christianized the country and organized it into a strong and independent state. Invasions by the Mongols in the 13th century and by the Ottoman Turks in the 14th century devastated the country, and by 1568 the territory of modern Hungary had been divided into three parts: Royal Hungary went to the Habsburgs; Transylvania gained autonomy in 1566 under the Turks; and the central plain remained under Turkish control until the late 17th century, when the Austrian Habsburgs took over. Hungary declared its independence from Austria in 1849, and in 1867 the dual monarchy of Austria-Hungary was established. Its defeat in World War I resulted in the dismemberment of Hungary, leaving it only those areas in which Magyars predominated. In an attempt to regain some of this lost territory, Hungary cooperated with the Germans against the Soviet Union during World War II. After the war, a pro-Soviet provisional government was established, and in 1949 the Hungarian People's Republic was formed. Opposition to this Stalinist regime broke out in 1956 but was suppressed. Nevertheless, from 1956 to 1988 communist Hungary grew to become the most tolerant of the Soviet-bloc nations of Eastern Europe. It gained its independence in 1989 and soon attracted the largest amount of direct foreign investment in east-central Europe. In 1999 it joined NATO and in 2004 the European Union.

Recent Developments

The drying up of credit markets led in the autumn of 2008 to a crisis of investor confidence and a weakening of the forint, which triggered the most serious budget crisis the country had seen since the fall of communism in 1989. Tension was high, as a key criterion for membership in the euro zone was the reduction of the country's budget deficit (3.4% of GDP in 2008). A Hungarian austerity program and the global financial meltdown combined to hold GDP growth to 0.6%, while soaring fuel and food prices pushed inflation to 6.1%.

Background

Iceland was settled by Norwegian seafarers in the 9th century and was Christianized by 1000. Its legislature, the Althing, was founded in 930, making it one of the oldest legislative assemblies in the world. Iceland united with Norway in 1262. It became an independent state of Denmark in 1918 but severed those ties to become an independent republic in 1944. Vigdís Finnbogadóttir became the world's first female elected president in 1980.

Recent Developments

Iceland's economy, in recent years one of the fastest growing in the developed world, was brought to a halt by the global financial crisis in late 2008. The government was forced to nationalize its leading banks, which held debt worth six times the Icelandic GDP, and secure some $US10 billion in loans from the IMF and donor countries, including its Nordic neighbors. In early 2009 the government collapsed as a result of the financial emergency.

Background

Agriculture in India dates back to at least the 7th millennium bc, and an urban civilization, that of the Indus valley, was established by 2600 bc. Buddhism and Jainism arose in the 6th century bc in reaction to the caste-based society created by the Vedic religion and its successor, Hinduism. Muslim invasions began c. ad 1000, establishing the long-lived Delhi sultanate in 1206 and the Mughal dynasty in 1526. Vasco da Gama's voyage to India in 1498 initiated several centuries of commercial rivalry among the Portuguese, Dutch, English, and French. British conquests in the 18th and 19th centuries led to the rule of the British East India Co., and direct administration by the British Empire began in 1858. After Mohandas K. Gandhi helped end British rule in 1947, Jawaharlal Nehru became India's first prime minister, and he, Indira Gandhi (his daughter), and Rajiv Gandhi (his grandson) guided the nation's destiny for all but a few years until 1989. The subcontinent was partitioned into two countries—India, with a Hindu majority, and Pakistan, with a Muslim majority—in 1947. A later clash with Pakistan resulted in the creation of Bangladesh in 1971. In the 1980s and '90s, Sikhs sought to establish an independent state in Punjab, and ethnic and religious conflicts took place in other parts of the country as well. In particular, the Kashmir region in the northwest has been a source of violent conflict.

Recent Developments

In late November 2008 India was rocked by terrorist attacks in Mumbai (Bombay). Gunmen believed to be connected to Lashkar-e-Taiba, a Pakistan-based terrorist organization, attacked 10 locations across the city with grenades and automatic weapons, taking hostages in several buildings, including two luxury hotels. When the police finally gained control three days later, at least 174 people had been killed and more than 300 wounded.

Securing an unconditional waiver from the Nuclear Suppliers Group for the resumption of commerce in civil nuclear energy became the most important foreign-policy objective for India in 2008. The measure was approved in September, shortly before Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's visit to the US, where he met with US Pres. George W. Bush. A bilateral agreement with the US was signed and ratified in October, opening the doors for increased trade in nuclear and high-technology areas. India signed a bilateral agreement in September with France and a civil nuclear cooperation agreement in early December with Russia. In October India also elevated its international status by launching an unmanned spacecraft, Chandrayaan-1, that would orbit the Moon and send a probe to its surface.

Background

Proto-Malay peoples migrated to Indonesia from mainland Asia before 1000 bc. Commercial relations were established with China in about the 5th century ad, and Hindu and Buddhist cultural influences from India began to take hold. Arab traders brought Islam to the islands in the 13th century; the religion took hold throughout the islands, except for Bali, which retained its Hindu religion and culture. European influence began in the 16th century, and the Dutch ruled Indonesia from the late 17th century until 1942, when the Japanese invaded. Independence leader Sukarno declared Indonesia's sovereignty in 1945, which the Dutch granted, with nominal union to The Netherlands, in 1949; Indonesia dissolved this union in 1954. The suppression of an alleged coup attempt in 1965 resulted in the deaths of more than 300,000 people the government claimed to be communists, and by 1968 Gen. Suharto had taken power. His government forcibly incorporated East Timor into Indonesia in 1975–76, with much loss of life; East Timor became independent in 2002. In the 1990s the country was beset by political, economic, and environmental problems, and Suharto was deposed in 1998.

Recent Developments

The falling popularity in 2008 of Indonesian Pres. Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono (commonly known as SBY) was attributed in part to the government's decision to reduce fuel subsidies by an average of almost 30%. The rising cost of these subsidies—some US$19 billion annually, or about one-fifth of total budget outlays—had become unsustainable, especially as the cost of crude oil imports spiraled upward. Though welcomed by most economists, the fuel price rises sparked public protests, some of them violent. The government sought to offset the impact of price rises on the poor by introducing a direct payment of 100,000 rupiah (about US$10) per month to low-income households. Initially criticized as financially inadequate and prone to corruption, the direct payments eventually won cautious approval from both grassroots communities and welfare groups. Despite the backlash on fuel prices, SBY's economic record remained good. The overall economy continued to grow more strongly than most others in the region, recording an annual increase of 6.4%, though inflation was relatively high, at 12.2%. Unemployment levels fell slightly, from 9.75% in early 2007 to 8.39% in mid-2008.

Background

Habitation in Iran dates to c. 100,000 bc, but recorded history began with the Elamites c. 3000 bc. The Medes flourished from c. 728 bc but were overthrown (550 bc) by the Persians, who were in turn conquered by Alexander the Great in the 4th century bc. The Parthians created a Greek-speaking empire that lasted from 247 bc to ad 226, when control passed to the Sasanians. Arab Muslims conquered them in 640 and ruled Iran for 850 years. In 1502 the Safavids established a dynasty that lasted until 1736. The Qajars ruled from 1779, but in the 19th century the country was controlled economically by the Russian and British empires. Reza Khan seized power in a coup (1921). His son Mohammad Reza Shah Pahlavi alienated religious leaders with a program of modernization and Westernization and was overthrown in 1979; Shi'ite cleric Ruhollah Khomeini then set up a fundamentalist Islamic republic, and Western influence was suppressed. The destructive Iran-Iraq War of the 1980s ended in a stalemate. Among the most contentious of Iran's foreign policy issues at the beginning of the 21st century was the ongoing question of the development of its nuclear capabilities. Iran insisted that its nuclear pursuits were intended for peaceful purposes, but the international community, expressing deep suspicion that Iran's activities included the development of nuclear weapons, advocated efforts to suspend them.

Recent Developments

Pres. Mahmoud Ahmadinejad's alleged continuing preoccupation with obtaining nuclear weaponry was opposed by the US and the EU, which continued in 2008 to attempt to deny Iran the capability to manufacture nuclear warheads. In March the UN Security Council passed the third in a series of minor sanctions against Iran. In dialogue with Security Council members and Germany, Iran was given more incentives to dissuade it from enriching uranium; the talks, however, only gave Iran time to press ahead. After Iran tested long-range missiles in July, the Security Council warned Tehran to comply with its resolution or face further sanctions, and at the end of September the council imposed a freeze on Iran's financial assets. Meanwhile, the International Atomic Energy Agency reported that month that Iran had increased the number of uranium-enrichment centrifuges and was poised to install thousands more. In June 2009, a presidential election was held, and Ahmadinejad was declared the winner under a cloud of allegations of irregularities and cheating. Thousands protested the results—hundreds were arrested and as many as 69 killed in clashes with security forces.

Background

Called Mesopotamia in Classical times, the region gave rise to the world's earliest civilizations, including those of Sumer, Akkad, and Babylon. Conquered by Alexander the Great in 330 bc, the area later became a battleground between Romans and Parthians and then between Sasanians and Byzantines. Arab Muslims conquered it in the 7th century ad and ruled until the Mongols took over in 1258. The Ottomans took control in the 16th century and ruled until 1917. The British occupied the country during World War I and created the kingdom of Iraq in 1921. The British occupied Iraq again during World War II. A king was restored following the war, but a revolution ended the monarchy in 1958. Following a series of military coups, the socialist Ba'ath Party, led by Saddam Hussein, took control and established totalitarian rule in 1968. The Iran-Iraq War of the 1980s and the Persian Gulf War (precipitated by the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in 1990) brought heavy casualties and disrupted the economy. The 1990s were dominated by economic and political turmoil. In response to increasingly willful and autocratic behavior by Saddam and the contention that Iraq was in possession of weapons of mass destruction (none were ever found), on 19 Mar 2003 air attacks on Baghdad began, and soon afterward US and British ground forces invaded southern Iraq from Kuwait; within a month most of the country was under the control of coalition forces. Saddam was taken into custody in December. In July 2003 US authorities established an Iraqi Governing Council, and a new interim constitution was agreed upon in late February 2004. Almost immediately after the occupation began, however, various forms of Iraqi opposition arose, and resistance attacks grew in frequency and violence in the years that followed.

Recent Developments

Despite acts of violence, including kidnappings and suicide bombings, the security situation improved noticeably in Baghdad and elsewhere in Iraq in 2008. The decline in violence was due in part to the "surge" of US forces starting in 2007 and to the commitment of US-backed Sunni militias—the Awakening Councils—who in 2006 had turned against al-Qaeda. In October the Shi'ite-dominated Iraqi government, eager to assert its control, took command of the Sunni Awakening Councils from the US. A shift toward national reconciliation occurred when Iraq's largest Sunni bloc, the Iraqi National Accord (INA), ended a nearly yearlong boycott and in July rejoined the cabinet—the INA had left Prime Minister Nuri al-Maliki's government in 2007 at the height of violence between Sunni and Shi'ite Arabs. The Iraqi parliament in September passed a crucial election law organizing the important provincial elections later held in January 2009, except in Kirkuk and the three provinces in the Kurdish region. Passage of the law fulfilled a major benchmark requested by the US and marked an important advance in the political sphere. Although Iraq's long-awaited oil law was stalled in the parliament at year's end, Royal Dutch Shell concluded a natural-gas agreement with the state-run Southern Oil Co. in September and set up an office in Baghdad. It was the first major international oil and gas firm to return to Iraq since the nationalization of the Iraqi oil industry in 1972. Several Arab countries (including Kuwait and Syria) sent ambassadors to Iraq, signaling an Arab thaw toward Baghdad. During the year Iraq negotiated a status-of-forces security agreement that would decide the future of US forces in Iraq. The final accord, approved in November, called for US forces to leave Iraqi towns and villages by June 2009 and for a total withdrawal of US forces from Iraq by the end of 2011. Iraqi authorities were given the right to prosecute US soldiers and defense contractors in cases of serious crimes committed off duty and off bases. A broader strategic framework agreement covered future bilateral relations between the US and Iraq. In early 2009 the UK's campaign in Iraq officially ended with a ceremony handing control of the southern city of Basra over to American forces. Limited numbers of British forces were scheduled to remain in Iraq for the immediate future, however. Controversy arose in May 2009 when it was reported that official Iraqi government statistics put the number of Iraqi civilians killed since the March 2003 invasion at more than 110,600.

Background

Human settlement in Ireland began c. 6000 BC, and Celtic migration dates from c. 300 BC. St. Patrick is credited with Christianizing the country in the 5th century AD. Norse domination began in 795 and ended in 1014, when the Norse were defeated by Brian Boru. Gaelic Ireland's independence ended in 1171, when English King Henry II proclaimed himself overlord of the island. Beginning in the 16th century, Irish Catholic landowners fled religious persecution by the English and were replaced by English and Scottish Protestants. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland was established in 1801. The Great Famine of the 1840s led over two million people to emigrate and built momentum for Irish Home Rule. The Easter Rising (1916) was followed by civil war (1919–21) between the Catholic majority in southern Ireland, who favored complete independence, and the Protestant majority in the north, who preferred continued union with Britain. Southern Ireland was granted dominion status and became the Irish Free State in 1921, and in 1937 it adopted the name Éire and became a sovereign independent nation. Britain recognized the status of Ireland in 1949 but declared that cession of the northern six counties could not occur without the consent of the Parliament of Northern Ireland. In 1973 Ireland joined the European Economic Community (later the European Community); it is now a member of the EU. The late 20th century was dominated by sectarian hostilities. The Irish government played a pivotal role in winning public support for the Belfast Agreement (1998), which secured it a consultative role in the affairs of Northern Ireland and removed Ireland's constitutional claim to the entire island's territory.

Recent Developments

The end of a decade of growth in housing construction—the famed “Celtic Tiger”—had been flagged in 2007, but there were hopes of a “soft landing.” When it came, however, the landing provided quite a shock, as the economy shrank 1.5% in 2008. In the first 11 months of 2008, average house prices fell by 8.3%, with a year-on-year drop of 9.6%. (The figures reflected only completed deals, taking no account of an excess of unsold stock.) The “live register” measure of unemployment increased from 181,449 in January 2008 to 291,363 in December, taking the annual rate to 8.6%; by April 2009 the total had reached 384,448. The rise in unemployment owed much to the drop in construction output, down by 25.2% in 2008. By the end of 2008, the government reported an €8 billion shortfall in tax receipts, due to the construction slump and slowing consumer spending.

Background

The record of human habitation in Israel is at least 100,000 years old. Efforts by Jews to establish a national state there began in the late 19th century. Britain supported Zionism and in 1922 assumed political responsibility for what was Palestine. Migration of Jews there during Nazi persecution led to deteriorating relations with Arabs. In 1947 the UN voted to partition the region into separate Jewish and Arab states, a decision opposed by neighboring Arab countries. The State of Israel was proclaimed in 1948, and Egypt, Transjordan, Syria, Lebanon, and Iraq immediately declared war on it. Israel won this war as well as the 1967 Six-Day War, in which it claimed the West Bank from Jordan and the Gaza Strip from Egypt. Another war with its Arab neighbors followed in 1973, but the Camp David Accords led to the signing of a peace treaty between Israel and Egypt in 1979. Israel invaded Lebanon to quell the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) in 1982, and in the late 1980s a Palestinian resistance movement arose in the occupied territories. Peace negotiations between Israel and the Arab states and Palestinians began in 1991. Israel and the PLO agreed in 1993 upon a five-year extension of self-government to the Palestinians of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Israel signed a full peace treaty with Jordan in 1994. Israeli soldiers and Lebanon's Hezbollah forces clashed in 1997. Following numerous contentious talks between Israel and Lebanon, Israeli troops abruptly withdrew from Lebanon in 2000, and negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians broke down amid violence that claimed hundreds of lives. In an effort to stem the fighting, Israel in 2005 withdrew its soldiers and settlers from parts of the West Bank and from all of the Gaza Strip, which came under Palestinian control.

Recent Developments

In September 2008 Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert resigned after more than two years of intensive police investigations. Six days before his resignation, Olmert leaked details of a far-reaching peace offer made to the Palestinians. In return for peace, Israel would hand over the equivalent of 100% of the West Bank, set up a temporary joint regime for Jerusalem's holy basin, and agree to the return to Israel proper of 2,000 Palestinian refugees annually over a 10-year period. The radical group Hamas categorically rejected any peacemaking with Israel and throughout the year fired thousands of rockets and mortar shells at Israeli towns and villages bordering the Gaza Strip. In an attempt to pressure Hamas, Israel maintained a land and sea blockade, causing a degree of humanitarian suffering for which it was widely criticized. Partly out of concern that the Gaza violence might overflow into Egypt, Cairo mediated a truce that went into effect on 19 June. In December Hamas refused to renew the truce and later fired more than 70 rockets and mortar shells at civilian targets in Israel. Israel's response was harsh. On 27 December, in an initial strike that lasted just under 4 minutes, Israeli warplanes and helicopters destroyed dozens of Hamas government buildings and installations, killing about 150 people, most of them militiamen. By the end of January 2009, an estimated 1,300 Gazans, many of them civilians, had been killed.

Background

The Etruscan civilization arose in the 9th century bc and was overthrown by the Romans in the 4th–3rd centuries bc. Barbarian invasions of the 4th and 5th centuries AD destroyed the Western Roman Empire. Italy's political fragmentation lasted for centuries but did not diminish its impact on European culture, notably during the Renaissance. From the 15th to the 18th century, Italian lands were ruled by France, the Holy Roman Empire, Spain, and Austria. When Napoleonic rule ended in 1815, Italy was again a grouping of independent states. The Risorgimento successfully united most of Italy, including Sicily and Sardinia, by 1861, and the unification of peninsular Italy was completed by 1870. Italy joined the Allies during World War I, but social unrest in the 1920s brought to power the Fascist movement of Benito Mussolini, and Italy allied itself with Nazi Germany in World War II. Defeated by the Allies in 1943, Italy proclaimed itself a republic in 1946. It was a charter member of NATO (1949) and of the European Community. It completed the process of setting up regional legislatures with limited autonomy in the 1970s. Since World War II it has experienced rapid changes of government but has remained socially stable. It worked with other European countries to establish the European Union.

Recent Developments

In 2008 Roberto Maroni, an official of the anti-immigration Northern League party, was named interior minister of Italy, and he swiftly produced controversial legislation intended to rein in immigration. In July Italy declared a state of emergency to limit the country's rising Roma (Gypsy) population. A plan to fingerprint all Roma in nomad camps was decreed by UNICEF as a violation of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. New immigration and crime legislation also called for proof of income and residence for stays of more than 90 days from foreign residents in Italy. Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi recommended the implementation of a satellite tracking system to help deter potential immigrants at their point of origin, most often from Balkan and North African seaports.

Background

The island of Jamaica was settled by Arawak Indians c. AD 600. It was sighted by Christopher Columbus in 1494; Spain colonized it in the early 16th century but neglected it because it lacked gold reserves. Britain gained control in 1655, and by the end of the 18th century Jamaica had become a prized colonial possession due to the volume of sugar produced by slave laborers. Slavery was abolished in the late 1830s, and the plantation system collapsed. Jamaica gained full internal self-government in 1959 and became an independent country within the British Commonwealth in 1962.

Recent Developments

Jamaica in April 2008 began soliciting proposals for the provision of 73 MW of renewable energy. Additionally, the takeover of Jamaica's five sugar factories by Brazil's Infinity Bio-Energy was confirmed in July, with the company stressing its intention to use sugar as the basis of a significant ethanol industry in the country.

Background

Japan's history began with the accession of the legendary first emperor, Jimmu, in 660 bc. The Yamato court established the first unified Japanese state in the 4th–5th centuries ad; during this period Buddhism arrived in Japan by way of Korea. For centuries Japan borrowed heavily from Chinese culture, but it began to sever its links with the mainland by the 9th century. In 1192 Minamoto Yoritomo established Japan's first bakufu, or shogunate. Unification was achieved in the late 1500s under the leadership of Oda Nobunaga, Toyotomi Hideyoshi, and Tokugawa Ieyasu. During the Tokugawa shogunate, beginning in 1603, the government imposed a policy of isolation. Under the leadership of Emperor Meiji (1868–1912), it adopted a constitution (1889) and began a program of modernization and Westernization. Japanese imperialism led to war with China (1894–95) and Russia (1904–05) as well as to the annexation of Korea (1910) and Manchuria (1931). During World War II Japan attacked US forces in Hawaii and the Philippines (December 1941) and occupied European colonial possessions in South Asia. In 1945 the US dropped atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, and Japan surrendered to the Allied powers. US postwar occupation of Japan led to a new democratic constitution in 1947. In rebuilding Japan's ruined industrial plant, new technology was used in every major industry. A tremendous economic recovery followed, and it was able to maintain a favorable balance of trade into the 1990s.

Recent Developments

In July the International Monetary Fund (IMF) reported that the Japanese economy was showing "resilience to recent external shocks" and that "activity remained robust through the first quarter of 2008." By October, though, it was apparent that the worldwide economic slowdown that had begun in the US after the collapse of the housing bubble was hitting Japan hard. Contraction of Japan's economy in the third quarter pushed it into recession, and it shrank by nearly 1.6% for the year. In the first quarter of 2009, the Japanese economy recorded its largest annual contraction ever, 15.2% over the preceding 12 months. The rise in Japan's import bill as the country paid record-high prices for imported oil, combined with a slump in exports, was devastating. The slowdown was also a product of developments at home, where both private residential investment and public investment declined sharply. These developments fed a sharp decline in the Japanese stock markets; the Nikkei 225 Stock Average fell to a 26-year low in late October before recovering slightly at year's end. The unemployment rate moved up to 4.0% in 2008, and by April 2009 it had risen another 1.1%. In response to the slowdown, the government passed a fiscal stimulus package valued at ¥1.8 trillion (about US$18.8 billion) in October 2008. A second package, valued at ¥5 trillion (about US$52.3 billion) was announced on 30 October. The next day, the Bank of Japan announced that it was lowering interest rates from 0.5% to 0.3%, the first time the central bank had cut rates in seven years. Additional measures designed to inject public funds into banks, along with a major economic stimulus package, worked their way through the Diet in late 2008.

Japan improved its relations with China and Europe in 2008. Chinese Pres. Hu Jintao traveled to Japan in May—the first visit by a Chinese head of state since 1998. His trip—which came after several years in which visits by Japanese heads of state to the Yasukuni Shrine (where both Japanese war dead and 14 Class A war criminals were enshrined) and anti-Japanese demonstrations in China had aggravated relations between the two neighbors—marked a milestone in improving ties. Nevertheless, the two countries continued to face difficulties dealing with issues such as the Chinese tainted-food scandal, which caused problems throughout Asia and elsewhere during the year.

Background

Jordan shares much of its history with Israel, since both occupy the area known historically as Palestine. Much of present-day eastern Jordan was incorporated into Israel under Kings David and Solomon c. 1000 bc. It fell to the Seleucids in 330 bc and to Muslim Arabs in the 7th century ad. The Crusaders extended the kingdom of Jerusalem east of the Jordan River in 1099. Jordan submitted to Ottoman Turkish rule during the 16th century. In 1920 the area comprising Jordan (then known as the Transjordan) was established within the British mandate of Palestine. Transjordan became an independent state in 1927, although the British mandate did not end until 1948. After hostilities with the new state of Israel ceased in 1949, Jordan annexed the West Bank of the Jordan River, administering the territory until Israel gained control of it in the Six-Day War of 1967. In 1970–71 Jordan was wracked by fighting between the government and guerrillas of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), a struggle that ended in the expulsion of the PLO from Jordan. In 1988 King Hussein renounced all Jordanian claims to the West Bank in favor of the PLO. In 1994 Jordan and Israel signed a full peace agreement. Upon the death of King Hussein in 1999, his son Abdullah took over the throne.

Recent Developments

Despite mounting inflation in 2008 spurred by unbridled increases in world oil and cereal prices, which was a risk factor for social upheaval, the government seemed firmly in control of the domestic security situation as it also tried to cope with its population of 750,000 Iraqi refugees. Though subsidies were eliminated, the salaries of public- and private-sector employees were raised. The Jordanian economy grew at an estimated annual rate of 6%, but officials considered rates of unemployment and poverty high.

Background

Named for its earliest inhabitants, the Kazakhs, the area came under Mongol rule in the 13th century. The Kazakhs consolidated a nomadic empire in the 15th–16th centuries. Under Russian rule by the mid-19th century, it became part of the Kirgiz Autonomous Republic formed by the Soviets in 1920, and in 1925 its name was changed to the Kazakh Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic. Kazakhstan obtained its independence in 1991, and during the 1990s it attempted to stabilize its economy.

Recent Developments

The political leadership in Kazakhstan spent 2008 seeking to prove its worthiness to head the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe in 2010 and pledged to meet certain requirements in the areas of political reform. Kazakhstan showed less willingness to meet international standards in the sphere of human rights protection. The government was sharply criticized by the international human rights community for handing Uzbek asylum seekers over to Uzbek security services on what were widely believed to be trumped-up charges.

Background

The coastal region of East Africa was dominated by Arabs until it was seized by the Portuguese in the 16th century. The Masai people held sway in the north and moved into central Kenya in the 18th century, while the Kikuyu expanded from their home region in south-central Kenya. The interior was explored by European missionaries in the 19th century. After the British took control, Kenya was established as a British protectorate (1890) and a crown colony (1920). The Mau Mau rebellion of the 1950s was directed against European colonialism. In 1963 the country became fully independent, and a year later a republican government under Jomo Kenyatta was elected. In 1992 Kenyan Pres. Daniel arap Moi allowed the country's first multiparty elections in three decades, though the balloting was marred by violence and fraud. Political turmoil occurred over the following years.

Recent Developments

Fighting between Kalenjin ethnic groups, who claimed traditional ownership of the land, and Kikuyu tenant farmers, who had settled in the area that was occupied by white farmers prior to independence, became politicized and violent in 2008 after the disputed presidential election in December 2007. Candidate Raila Odinga accused the government of having rigged the election when incumbent Mwai Kibaki was sworn in as president before an official result was announced. Violence by Odinga's supporters in the west was countered by Kikuyu attacks on western ethnic-group settlers. More than 1,000 people were killed, and 300,000–600,000 people were displaced. In February an outline agreement to create the new post of prime minister was signed, with Kibaki remaining president and Odinga named prime minister.

Background

The islands were settled by Austronesian-speaking peoples before the 1st century AD. In 1765 the British discovered the island of Nikunau; the first permanent European settlers arrived in 1837. In 1916 the Gilbert and Ellice Islands and Banaba became a crown colony of Britain; they were later joined by the Phoenix and Line Islands. The Ellice Islands declared independence (as Tuvalu) in 1978, and in 1979 the remaining islands became the nation of Kiribati.

Recent Developments

In 2008 Kiribati confronted serious challenges to its future from accelerating climate change and rising sea levels, which some analysts predicted could leave the low-lying island country uninhabitable by the end of the century. However, the same sea was thought to contain mineral wealth, and Kiribati was seeking recognition of a huge submerged continental shelf area beyond the country's 370-km (200-nautical-mile) exclusive economic zone.

Background

According to tradition, the ancient kingdom of Choson was established in the northern part of the Korean peninsula, probably by peoples from northern China, in the 3rd millennium bc and was conquered by China in 108 bc. The kingdom was ruled by the Yi dynasty from 1392 to 1910. That year Korea was formally annexed by Japan. It was freed from Japanese control in 1945, at which time the USSR occupied the area north of latitude 38° N and the US occupied the area south of it. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea was established as a communist state in 1948. North Korea launched an invasion of South Korea in 1950, initiating the Korean War, which ended with an armistice in 1953. Under Kim Il-sung, North Korea became one of the most harshly regimented societies in the world, with a state-owned economy that failed to produce adequate food. In the late 1990s, under Kim Il-sung's successor, Kim Jong Il, the country endured a serious famine; as many as one million Koreans may have died. In October 2006 North Korea conducted an underground nuclear test.

Recent Developments

Ongoing international negotiations to rid North Korea of nuclear weapons and related programs made no progress. In April 2009 North Korea controversially test-fired a long-range missile, and after receiving international condemnation, it announced that it was pulling out of disarmament talks and restarting its nuclear facilities, including those aimed at producing plutonium. On 25 May the country conducted its second nuclear test, an underground explosion roughly equal in strength to those that destroyed Hiroshima and Nagasaki in World War II. The next day it test-fired two more missiles. South Korea responded to the nuclear test by joining the Proliferation Security Initiative, a US-led effort involving 94 nations' navies that intercepted and searched ships around the world suspected of carrying weapons of mass destruction. North Korea, in turn, pointedly refused to guarantee the safety of any US or South Korean ships in the vicinity of its waters. It also declared that it was no longer bound by the terms of the cease-fire that had effectively ended the Korean War more than 50 years earlier.

Background

Civilization in the Korean peninsula dates to the 3rd millennium bc. The Republic of Korea was established in 1948 in the southern portion of the Korean peninsula. In 1950 North Korean troops invaded South Korea, precipitating the Korean War. UN forces sided with South Korea, while Chinese troops backed North Korea in the war, which ended with an armistice in 1953. The devastated country was rebuilt with US aid, and South Korea prospered in the postwar era, developing a strong export-oriented economy. It experienced an economic downturn in the mid-1990s that affected many Asian economies. Efforts at reconciliation between North and South Korea, including the first-ever summit between their leaders (2000) and reunions of families from both countries, were accompanied by periods of continuing tension.

Recent Developments

South Korea, a country heavily dependent on foreign trade and investment, was hit hard by the global economic downturn in 2008. The stock market plummeted nearly 40% for the year, while at one point the local currency lost half of its value against the US dollar. Korea also experienced a trade deficit for the first time since 1997. Amazingly, the unemployment rate remained low (3.3% in December), and economic growth was positive for the year, but Pres. Lee Myung-bak warned that the economy could shrink in 2009. Fortunately, the crisis did lead to something that two successive nuclear standoffs with North Korea had failed to accomplish: the first-ever summit between South Korea, China, and Japan, which took place on 13 December. China and Japan agreed to provide South Korea with a badly needed foreign-currency swap, and the three countries agreed to make their gathering an annual occurrence.

Background

The Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes was created after the collapse of Austria-Hungary at the end of World War I. The country signed treaties with Czechoslovakia and Romania in 1920–21, marking the beginning of the Little Entente. In 1929 an absolute monarchy was established, the country's name was changed to Yugoslavia, and it was divided into regions without regard to ethnic boundaries. Axis powers invaded Yugoslavia in 1941, and German, Italian, Hungarian, and Bulgarian troops occupied it for the rest of World War II. In 1945 the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was established; it included the republics of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Macedonia, Montenegro, Serbia, and Slovenia. Its independent form of communism under Josip Broz Tito's leadership provoked the USSR. Internal ethnic tensions flared up in the 1980s, causing the country's ultimate collapse. In 1991–92 independence was declared by Croatia, Slovenia, Macedonia, and Bosnia and Herzegovina; the new Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (containing roughly 45% of the population and 40% of the area of its predecessor) was proclaimed by Serbia and Montenegro. Still fueled by long-standing ethnic tensions, hostilities continued into the 1990s. Despite the approval of the Dayton Peace Agreement (1995), sporadic fighting continued and was followed in 1998–99 by Serbian repression and expulsion of ethnic populations in the province of Kosovo. In September–October 2000, the battered nation of Yugoslavia ended the autocratic rule of Pres. Slobodan Milosevic. In April 2001 he was arrested and in June extradited to The Hague to stand trial for war crimes, genocide, and crimes against humanity committed during the fighting in Kosovo. In February 2003 both houses of the Yugoslav federal legislature voted to accept a new state charter and change the name of the country from Yugoslavia to Serbia and Montenegro. Henceforth, defense, international political and economic relations, and human rights matters would be handled centrally, while all other functions would be run from the republican capitals, Belgrade and Podgorica, respectively. The move was seen as an acknowledgment that Serbia and Montenegro had little in common, and a provision was included for both states to vote on independence after three years; Serbia declared its independence in June 2006, shortly after Montenegro severed its federal union with Serbia. From 1999 an autonomous region administered by the UN, Kosovo declared its independence from Serbia on 17 Feb 2008. That December the UN transferred most of its powers of oversight to the EU.

Recent Developments

On 17 Feb 2008, Kosovo formally declared its independence from Serbia. Though calm endured in much of the country, tension centered on the ethnically divided northern town of Mitrovica, where Serbia's influence on Kosovo's Serbs remained significant and violence broke out. Organized crime and a thriving black market continued to be concerns, along with an unemployment rate of more than 40% and a per capita income that remained among the lowest in Europe. By year's end 53 countries (including all of the neighboring states except Serbia) recognized Kosovo's independence.

until 1200 bc. Greek colonists resettled the island in the 4th century bc. Abd Rahim of the Sabah dynasty became sheikh in 1756, the first of a family that continues to rule Kuwait. In 1899, to thwart German and Ottoman influences, Kuwait gave Britain control of its foreign affairs. Following the outbreak of war in 1914, Britain established a protectorate there. In 1961, after Kuwait became independent, Iraq laid claim to it. British troops defended Kuwait, the Arab League recognized its independence, and Iraq dropped its claim. Iraqi forces invaded and occupied Kuwait in 1990, and a US-led military coalition drove them out in 1991. The destruction of many of Kuwait's oil wells complicated reconstruction efforts.

Recent Developments

Declining economic conditions in Kuwait for foreign workers, who made up two-thirds of the population, led them in July 2008 to strike. Disturbances continued for three days, resulting in clashes with the security force and the deportation of hundreds of workers (mainly Bengalis). In an attempt to address the problem, the government announced plans to raise the workers' minimum wage, revise work contracts, and improve living conditions. Kuwaiti nationals also protested the rise in food and commodity prices. In response the government twice increased the salaries of Kuwaitis working in the public sector by 170 Kuwaiti dinars (about US$643). Relations between Kuwait and Iraq saw a noticeable improvement during the year. In July Kuwait announced the appointment of an ambassador in Baghdad, the first since Iraq's 1990 invasion.

Background

The Kyrgyz, a nomadic people of Central Asia, settled in the Tian Shan region in ancient times. They were conquered by Genghis Khan's son Jochi in 1207. The area became part of the Qing empire of China in the mid-18th century. The region came under Russian control in the 19th century, and its rebellion against Russia in 1916 resulted in a long period of brutal repression. Kirgiziya became an autonomous province of the USSR in 1924 and was made the Kirghiz Soviet Socialist Republic in 1936. Kyrgyzstan gained independence in 1991. It subsequently struggled with creating a democratic process and with establishing a stable economy.

Recent Developments

Despite large amounts of international assistance to the development of its economy, Kyrgyzstan continued in 2008 to flounder both politically and economically. According to the country's national bank, by the beginning of 2009 more than US$1 billion had been poured into Kyrgyzstan in the form of foreign investment and grants. Increasing numbers of Kyrgyz citizens were searching for work abroad, and in early 2008 the National Migration Agency reported that 250,000 Kyrgyz were employed in Russia—a figure that did not include the number working in Kazakhstan and other neighboring countries. The World Bank noted that remittances from labor migrants made up 37% of Kyrgyzstan's GDP.

Background

The Lao people migrated into Laos from southern China after the 8th century AD, displacing indigenous tribes. In the 14th century Fa Ngum founded the first Laotian state, Lan Xang. Except for a period of rule by Burma (1574–1637), the Lan Xang kingdom ruled Laos until 1713, when it split into three kingdoms. France gained control of the region in 1893. In 1945 Japan seized it and declared Laos independent. The area reverted to French rule after World War II. The Geneva Conference of 1954 unified and granted independence to Laos. Communist forces took control in 1975, establishing the Lao People's Democratic Republic. Laos held its first election in 1989 and promulgated a new constitution in 1991. Although its economy was adversely affected by the mid-1990s Asian monetary crises, it realized a longtime goal in 1997 when it joined the Association of Southeast Asian Nations.

Recent Developments

In exchange for a 50-year concession of thousands of acres of wetlands north of the capital, a Chinese-led joint venture agreed in 2008 to build a sports complex on the outskirts of Vientiane in preparation for the 2009 Southeast Asian Games. This agreement was received very poorly by the population living in the capital. Land concessions had emerged as a serious and complex issue over the past few years in Laos—they often covered village lands, owing to poorly defined and enforced regulations governing land rights. The most controversial aspect of land concessions concerned the lease of vast areas of cultivable land to foreign investors for the commercial production of crops (notably rubber and cassava).

Background

Latvia was settled by the Balts in ancient times. It was conquered by the Vikings in the 9th century and later dominated by its German-speaking neighbors, who Christianized the people in the 12th–13th centuries. By 1230 German rule was established. From the mid-16th to the early 18th century, the region was split between Poland and Sweden, but by the end of the 18th century all of Latvia had been annexed by Russia. Latvia declared its independence after the Russian Revolution of 1917, but in 1940 the Soviet Red Army invaded. Held by Nazi Germany in 1941–44, the country was recaptured by the Soviets and incorporated into the Soviet Union. Latvia gained its independence in 1991 with the breakup of the Soviet Union; subsequently it sought to build ties with Western Europe (becoming a member of both the EU and NATO in 2004).

Recent Developments

In 2008 Latvia's economy, which had enjoyed growth of 10.3% in 2007, was affected by the international financial crises and contracted to a trickle. Inflation hit 16.5%, the cost of natural gas and electricity rose 30–40%, and earlier promises to raise pensions and the salaries of medical personnel and the police had to be broken. In the realm of foreign affairs, Latvia deplored Russia's invasion of Georgia; Riga increased its assistance to that country and supported the EU's peace-fostering efforts there. Nonetheless, Riga focused on forging specific bilateral agreements with Russia and also discussed energy and trade with Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, and Turkmenistan.

Background

Much of present-day Lebanon corresponds to ancient Phoenicia, which was settled c. 3000 bc. In the 6th century AD, Christians fleeing Syrian persecution settled in what is now northern Lebanon and founded the Maronite Church. Arab tribesmen settled in southern Lebanon and by the 11th century had founded the Druze faith. Lebanon was later ruled by the Mamluks. In 1516 the Ottoman Turks seized control; the Turks ended the local rule of the Druze Shihab princes in 1842. After the massacre of Maronites by Druze in 1860, France forced the Ottomans to form an autonomous province for the Christian area, known as Mount Lebanon. Following World War I, it was administered by the French military, but by 1946 it was fully independent. After the Arab-Israeli War of 1948-49, Palestinian refugees settled in southern Lebanon. In 1970 the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) moved its headquarters there and began raids into northern Israel. Political and religious divisions and a growing Palestinian "state within a state" fueled a descent into civil war. In 1976 Syria intervened on behalf of the Christians, and in 1982 Israeli forces attempted to drive Palestinian fighters out of southern Lebanon. Israeli troops had withdrawn from all but a narrow buffer zone in the south by 1985; thereafter, guerrillas from the Lebanese Shi'ite militia Hezbollah clashed with the Israelis regularly, including open warfare in 2006. Israeli soldiers completely withdrew from Lebanon in 2000, and Syrian forces disengaged from the country in 2005.

Recent Developments

In May 2008, following an 18-month political stand-off between various Lebanese factions and a brush with civil war between the Sunnis and the Shi'ites two weeks earlier, Gen. Michel Suleiman was elected president in Lebanon. The election was made possible by the Qatari-brokered Doha Agreement, which entailed important concessions on the part of the pro-Saudi, pro-Western, Sunni-dominated government whereby the majority consented to turn a blind eye toward Hezbollah arms stockpiles and agreed to give veto power in the cabinet to the organization. They also gave the Christian opposition, through a reenactment of the 1960 electoral law, the political strength to elect their own representatives without the need to enlist the votes of Muslims. The security situation remained unstable, especially in the north of the country. A visit in August by President Suleiman to Damascus resulted in an agreement to establish diplomatic relations between the two countries. Suleiman also visited the UN and Washington DC, but he was disappointed that Washington did not agree to rearm the Lebanese army with technologically advanced weapons that would counter the technology of Hezbollah.

Background

Bantu-speaking farmers created a number of chiefdoms in the area in the 16th century. The most powerful organized the Basotho in 1824 and obtained British protection in 1843 as tension between the Basotho and the South African Boers increased. The area became a British territory in 1868 and was annexed to the Cape Colony in 1871. The colony's effort to disarm the Basotho resulted in revolt in 1880, and four years later it separated from the colony and became a British High Commission Territory. In 1966 it gained independence. A new constitution (1993) ended seven years of military rule. At the beginning of the 21st century, Lesotho suffered from a deteriorating economy and one of the world's highest HIV/AIDS infection rates.

Recent Developments

Although Lesotho's 2008 crops were better than those of previous years, some 352,000 people required food or financial assistance—the World Food Programme helped provide free meals for some 80,000 schoolchildren. The country's HIV prevalence rate was 23.2%, one of the world's highest; life expectancy fell to only 35 years; and more than 100,000 children had been orphaned by AIDS.

Background

Africa's oldest republic, Liberia was established as a home for freed American slaves under the American Colonization Society, which founded a colony at Cape Mesurado in 1821. Joseph Jenkins Roberts, Liberia's first nonwhite governor, proclaimed Liberian independence in 1847. In 1980 a coup led by Samuel K. Doe marked the end of the Americo-Liberians' long political dominance over the descendants of indigenous Africans. A destructive civil war consumed the 1990s. A National Transitional Government, supported by UN peacekeeping troops, was established in 2003. Presidential elections were held in 2005, and Ellen Johnson Sirleaf was declared the winner, the first woman to be elected head of state in Africa.

Recent Developments

In January 2008 the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, established to investigate war crimes committed during Liberia's civil war, began proceedings. Modeled on South Africa's postapartheid body, the seven-member commission heard testimony from people around the country, including gruesome accounts of child-soldier recruitment, severed limbs, and rape. Former rebel commander Milton Blahyi (also known as General Butt-Naked) testified about having taken part in human sacrifices. Meanwhile, international attention turned to the war crimes trials of former president Gen. Charles Taylor in The Hague and his son Charles (Chuckie) Taylor, Jr., in the US. In October Chuckie was convicted of charges of torture and related war crimes. He was sentenced in January 2009 to 97 years in prison.

Background

Greeks and Phoenicians settled the area in the 7th century BC. It was conquered by Rome in the 1st century BC and by Arabs in the 7th century AD. In the 16th century the Ottoman Turks combined Libya's three regions under one regency in Tripoli. In 1911 Italy claimed control of Libya, and by the outbreak of World War II, 150,000 Italians lived there. It became an independent state in 1951. The discovery of oil in 1959 brought wealth to Libya. A decade later a group of army officers led by Muammar al-Qaddafi deposed the king and made the country an Islamic republic. Under Qaddafi's rule it supported the Palestinian Liberation Organization and terrorist groups, bringing protests from many countries, particularly the US. In intermittent warfare with Chad during the 1970s and '80s ended with Chad's defeat of Libya in 1987. International relations in the 1990s were dominated by the consequences of the 1988 bombing of an American airliner over Lockerbie, Scotland; the US accused Libyan nationalists of the deed and imposed a trade embargo on Libya, endorsed by the UN in 1992. This sanction was lifted in 2003.

Recent Developments

Five years of fence mending between Libya and Western countries culminated in a visit to Tripoli in September 2008 by US Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice—the first direct contact by a high-ranking US official since 1957. Rice's trip marked a major thaw in relations and paved the way for trade and investment by American corporations, particularly in the energy sector. Although in October Libya completed the compensation payments to the families of the victims of the Lockerbie tragedy, the moneys due to the families of the victims of the 1986 Berlin disco bombing, for which Libya also took responsibility, remained unpaid. The US Congress blocked the establishment of formal diplomatic relations until this had been settled. During his August visit to Libya, Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi offered a formal apology for Italy's years of colonial rule (1911–43) as well as US$5 billion in compensation. In return Italy expected to receive favorable concessions in the energy sector and cooperation in combating illegal boat immigrants who sailed from Libyan territorial waters. In another sign of international acceptance, Libyan leader Muammar al-Qaddafi assumed the chairmanship of the African Union in February 2009.

Total active duty personnel: none. Liechtenstein has had no standing army since 1868; defense is the responsibility of Switzerland.

Background

The Rhine plain was occupied for centuries by two independent lordships of the Holy Roman Empire, Vaduz and Schellenberg. The principality of Liechtenstein, consisting of these two lordships, was founded in 1719 and remained part of the Holy Roman Empire. It was included in the German Confederation (1815–66). In 1866 it became independent, recognizing Vaduz and Schellenberg as unique regions forming separate electoral districts. An almost 60-year ruling coalition dissolved in 1997, and the prince won the passage of constitutional reforms in 2003 that greatly strengthened royal power.

Recent Developments

Liechtenstein found itself in trouble for its banking practices in 2008. A former clerk at LGT, the bank owned by the Liechtenstein royal family, had offered Germany's Federal Intelligence Service a CD-ROM with data on German clients who held secret accounts at the Liechtenstein bank as part of a cross-border tax-evasion scheme.

Background

Lithuanian tribes united in the mid-13th century to oppose the Teutonic knights. Gediminas, one of the grand dukes, expanded Lithuania into an empire that dominated much of Eastern Europe in the 14th through 16th centuries. In 1386 the Lithuanian grand duke became the king of Poland, and the two countries remained closely associated until Lithuania was acquired by Russia in the Third Partition of Poland in 1795. Occupied by Germany during World War I, it declared its independence in 1918. In 1940 the Soviet Red Army gained control of Lithuania. Germany occupied it again in 1941–44, but the USSR regained control in 1944. With the breakup of the USSR, Lithuania became independent in 1991. It signed a border treaty with Russia in 1997, and it joined the European Union and NATO in 2004.

Recent Developments

Lithuania supported Georgia following the August 2008 incursion into that country by Russian troops. Pres. Valdas Adamkus traveled to Tbilisi—together with the leaders of Estonia, Latvia, and Poland—and in a joint declaration demanded the withdrawal of the Russian troops and suggested that the NATO Membership Action Plan be offered to Georgia. In 2009 Vilnius was named one of two European Capitals of Culture, and Lithuania celebrated the 1,000th anniversary of its name.

Background

At the time of Roman conquest (57–50 bc), Luxembourg was inhabited by a Belgic tribe. After ad 400, Germanic tribes invaded the region. Made a duchy in 1354, it was ceded to the house of Burgundy in 1443 and to the Habsburgs in 1477. In the mid-16th century it became part of the Spanish Netherlands. It was made a grand duchy in 1815. After an uprising in 1830, its western portion became part of Belgium, while the remainder was held by The Netherlands. In 1867 the European powers guaranteed the neutrality and independence of Luxembourg. In the late 19th century it exploited its extensive iron-ore deposits. It was invaded and occupied by Germany in both world wars. It abandoned its neutrality by joining NATO in 1949; it had joined the Benelux Economic Union in 1944. A member of the European Union, its economy has continued to expand. On 7 Oct 2000, Grand Duke Jean abdicated power in favor of his son, Crown Prince Henri, after 36 years on the throne.

Recent Developments

Luxembourg's economy continued to provide an extraordinarily high standard of living in 2008, with a GDP per capita ranked second in the world. However, the meltdown in the world's financial markets was expected to affect even Luxembourg's economy in 2009, as experts predicted a contraction of 4.8%.

Background

Macedonia has been inhabited since before 7000 bc. Part of it was incorporated into a Roman province in ad 29. It was settled by Slavic tribes by the mid-6th century ad. Seized by the Bulgarians in 1185, it was ruled by the Ottoman Empire from 1371 to 1912. The north and center of the region were annexed by Serbia in 1913 and in 1918 became part of what was later known as Yugoslavia. When Yugoslavia was partitioned by the Axis powers in 1941, Yugoslav Macedonia was occupied principally by Bulgaria. Macedonia again became part of Yugoslavia in 1946. After Croatia and Slovenia seceded from Yugoslavia, fear of Serbian dominance drove Macedonia to declare its independence in 1991. Because of Greek objections over using the name of an ancient Greek province, it entered the UN in 1993 as "The Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia."

Recent Developments

Macedonia's bid to join NATO was vetoed in April 2008 by Greece during the alliance's summit meeting in Bucharest, Romania. Prior to the summit, a round of intense UN-mediated talks between Skopje and Athens over Macedonia's name had failed to produce any results. Though talks continued throughout 2008, both sides stuck to their previous positions. Macedonia's GDP grew 4.8% in 2008, but inflation rose to 8.4% and unemployment stood at 34.5%.

Background

Indonesians migrated to Madagascar about AD 700. The first European to visit the island was Portuguese navigator Diogo Dias in 1500. Trade in arms and slaves allowed the development of Malagasy kingdoms at the beginning of the 17th century. The Merina kingdom became dominant in the 18th century and in 1868 signed a treaty granting France control over the northwestern coast. In 1895 French troops took the island, and Madagascar became a French overseas territory in 1946. As the Malagasy Republic, it gained independence in 1960. It severed ties with France in the 1970s. A new constitution was adopted in 1992, and the country was named the Republic of Madagascar. The country has since been both politically and economically unstable.

Recent Developments

Though the cyclones that hit the northern part of Madagascar in early 2008 did not do as much damage as those the previous year, hundreds of thousands of people were left without homes, much of the harvest in the areas affected was destroyed, and the steep rise in food and fuel prices in 2008 brought further hardship to many—the UN estimated in 2009 that nearly 3.4 million people required humanitarian assistance.

Background

Inhabited since at least 8000 BC, the region was settled by Bantu-speaking peoples between the 1st and the 4th century AD. About 1480 they founded the Maravi Confederacy, which encompassed most of central and southern Malawi. In northern Malawi the Ngonde people established a kingdom about 1600. The slave trade flourished during the 18th–19th centuries. Britain established colonial authority in 1891, and the area became known as Nyasaland in 1907. The colonies of Northern and Southern Rhodesia and Nyasaland formed (1951–53) a federation, which was dissolved in 1963. The next year Malawi achieved independence. In 1966 it became a republic, with Hastings Banda as president. In 1971 Banda was designated president for life, and he ruled until he was defeated in multiparty elections in 1994. A new constitution was adopted in 1995.

Recent Developments

Heavy rains and floods destroyed homes and crops in Malawi in 2008 and aroused fears of food shortages. The government's assurances that there were adequate reserves from previous years failed to silence criticisms of the export in 2007 of 300,000 metric tons of corn (maize) to Zimbabwe. The food-shortage fears, however, eventually proved unfounded. The government's distribution of subsidized seed and fertilizers was so effective that it even became possible to again export some of the surplus grain.

Background

Malaya has been inhabited for 6,000–8,000 years, and small kingdoms existed in the 2nd–3rd centuries AD, when adventurers from India first arrived. Sumatran exiles founded the city-state of Malacca about 1400, and it flourished as a trading and Islamic religious center until its capture by the Portuguese in 1511. Malacca passed to the Dutch in 1641. The British founded a settlement on Singapore Island in 1819, and by 1867 they had established the Straits Settlements, including Malacca, Singapore, and Penang. During the late 19th century the Chinese began to migrate to Malaya. Japan invaded in 1941. Opposition to British rule led to the creation of the United Malays National Organization (UNMO) in 1946, and in 1948 the peninsula was federated with Penang. Malaya gained independence in 1957, and the Federation of Malaysia was established in 1963. Its economy expanded greatly from the late 1970s, but it suffered from the economic slump that struck the area in the mid-1990s.

Recent Developments

Malaysia's economy continued its strong expansion for the most part in 2008, with GDP growth of 6.7% during the first half of the year and 4.6% overall. The country benefited from surging fuel prices, with the value of its palm-oil and crude-petroleum exports increasing by more than 50%. The global financial crisis at the end of the year was sobering, however. Unemployment grew slightly, to 3.7%. Inflation, already on the rise, soared to 8.5% in July, the highest level in 27 years. Analysts attributed the spike to a 40% reduction in government fuel subsidies in June. Rubber exports fell more than 10%, total external public debt rose by US$11.2 billion, and the ringgit fell 4.5% against the US dollar. Analysts warned that the impact of a string of collapses of US financial institutions on the country's crucial Asian export markets could be severe.

Background

The archipelago was settled in the 5th century BC by Buddhists from Sri Lanka and southern India, and Islam was adopted there in 1153. The Portuguese held sway in Male in 1558–73. The islands were a sultanate under the Dutch rulers of Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) during the 17th century. After the British gained control of Ceylon in 1796, the area became a British protectorate, a status formalized in 1887. The islands won full independence from Britain in 1965, and in 1968 a republic was founded. The Maldives joined the Commonwealth in 1982.

Recent Developments

The adoption in 2008 of a democratic constitution marked the beginning of a remarkable political change in Maldives, which on 8 October held multi-party elections for the first time in its history. Observers from the UN, the Commonwealth of Nations, and the EU monitored the balloting, in which voter turnout was registered at about 86%. A runoff poll was won by Mohamed Nasheed, ending Pres. Maumoon Abdul Gayoom's 30-year rule. The constitution also fixed a maximum of two five-year terms for candidates seeking election to the presidency, strengthened the People's Majlis (parliament), and ensured the independence of the judiciary.

Background

Inhabited since prehistoric times, the region was situated on a caravan route across the Sahara. In the 12th century, the Malinke empire of Mali was founded on the Upper and Middle Niger. In the 15th century, the Songhai empire in the Timbuktu-Gao region gained control. In 1591 Morocco invaded the area, and Timbuktu remained under the Moors for two centuries. In the mid-19th century, the French conquered the area, which became a part of French West Africa known as the French Sudan. In 1946 it became an overseas territory of the French Union. It was proclaimed the Sudanese Republic in 1958, briefly joined with Senegal (1959–60) to form the Mali Federation, and became the Republic of Mali in 1960. The government was overthrown by military coups in 1968 and 1991. Democratic multiparty elections have been held every five years since 1992.

Recent Developments

Efforts to resolve the Tuareg rebellion in the deserts of northern Mali continued. In March 2008, Tuaregs led by Ibrahim Ag Bahanga released the last hostages captured in August 2007. In February 2009 it was announced that fighters for Ag Bahanga, who reportedly had fled Mali, were the only Tuareg group who had not rejoined peace talks.

Background

Inhabited as early as 3800 bc, Malta was ruled by the Carthaginians from the 6th century bc until it came under Roman control in 218 bc. In ad 60 the apostle Paul converted the inhabitants to Christianity. It was under Byzantine rule until the Arabs seized control in 870. In 1091 the Normans defeated the Arabs, and Malta was ruled by feudal lords until it came under the Knights of Malta in 1530. Napoleon seized control in 1798; the British took it in 1800 and returned it to the Knights in 1802. The Maltese protested and acknowledged the British as sovereign, an arrangement ratified in 1814. It became self-governing in 1921 but reverted to a colonial regime in 1936. Malta was severely bombed by Germany and Italy during World War II, and in 1942 it received the George Cross, Britain's highest civilian decoration. In 1964 it gained independence within the Commonwealth and in 1974 became a republic. In 2004 it joined the EU, and it adopted the euro as its official currency in 2008.

Recent Developments

On 1 Jan 2008, after three years of working to get the economy back on track, Malta joined the euro zone, replacing the Maltese lira, which had been in existence since Malta abandoned the British system in May 1972. Illegal immigration was on the increase throughout the year, as Frontex, the EU's border security agency, did not achieve the positive results anticipated.

Military

Total active duty personnel: none. The US provides for the defense of the Republic of the Marshall Islands under the 1984 and 2003 compacts of free association; the US Army's premier ballistic missile test site is at Kwajalein.

Background

The islands were sighted in 1529 by the Spanish navigator Álvaro Saavedra. Germany purchased them from Spain in 1899, and Japan seized them in 1914. During World War II the US took Kwajalein and Enewetak, and the Marshall Islands were made part of a UN trust territory under US jurisdiction in 1947. Bikini and Enewetak atolls served as testing grounds for US nuclear weapons from 1946 to 1958. The country became an internally self-governing republic in 1979. In 1986 it became fully self-governing when it entered into a Compact of Free Association with the US, which was renewed in 2003.

Recent Developments

Economic growth in the Marshall Islands hovered around 1% in 2008. Debt was roughly 75% of the GDP, and a number of loans were coming due. Meanwhile, nearly US$10 million in taxes remained uncollected, and there was little investment in the private sector.

Did you know?

The Atlantic Ocean off Mauritania has historically been among the richest fisheries in the world for both pelagic (open sea) and demersal (seafloor) species. Since gaining its independence in 1960, Mauritania has derived a significant proportion of national revenue from regulating the fishing fleets of Japan, China, the EU, and others. A lack of enforcement of these regulations by 2002 had led to a dramatic fall in overall species catch because of overfishing (particularly for octopus), as well as a damaged marine environment.

Background

Inhabited in ancient times by Sanhadja Berbers, in the 11th and 12th centuries Mauritania was the center of the Berber Almoravid movement, which imposed Islam. Arab tribes arrived in the 15th century and formed powerful confederations; the Portuguese also arrived then. France gained control of the coast in 1817 and in 1903 made the territory a protectorate. In 1904 it was added to French West Africa, and later it became a colony. In 1960 Mauritania achieved independence. Its first president was ousted in a 1978 military coup. After a series of military rulers, in 1991 a new constitution was adopted, and multiparty elections were held in 1992. The country faced continued economic hardship and political unrest, including coups, in the late 20th and early 21st centuries.

Recent Developments

Mauritania's brief experiment with democracy ended in August 2008, when a military coup toppled Pres. Sidi Mohamed Ould Cheikh Abdallahi, the country's first democratically elected president since independence in 1960. The coup immediately elicited international condemnation, the freezing of aid from major donors, suspension from the African Union, and in early 2009, the severing of ties with the EU.

Background

The island was visited by the Portuguese in the early 16th century. The Dutch took possession in 1598 and made attempts to settle it (1638–58 and 1664–1710) before abandoning it to pirates. The French East India Company occupied Mauritius in 1721 and administered it until the French government took over in 1767. Sugar production allowed the colony to prosper. The British captured the island in 1810 and were granted formal control in 1814. In the late 19th century, competition from beet sugar and the opening of the Suez Canal caused an economic decline. After World War II, Mauritius adopted political and economic reforms, and in 1968 it became an independent state within the Commonwealth. In 1992 it became a republic. It experienced political unrest during the 1990s.

Recent Developments

In a bid to strengthen trade ties with China, the Mauritius government in 2008 agreed to a US$730 million project, the country's largest foreign direct investment, to build a trade-development zone that would house several Chinese businesses. Mauritius's two main economic sectors, sugarcane and textiles, had suffered downturns since the lifting in 2005 of trade preferences, and officials hoped the deal would result in making the country a center for regional economic development.

Background

Inhabited for more than 20,000 years, Mexico produced great civilizations in AD 100–900, including the Olmec, Toltec, Mayan, and Aztec. The Aztec were conquered in 1521 by Spanish explorer Hernán Cortés, who established Mexico City on the site of the Aztec capital, Tenochtitlán. Francisco de Montejo conquered the remnants of Mayan civilization in the mid-16th century, and Mexico became part of the Viceroyalty of New Spain. In 1821 rebels negotiated a status quo independence from Spain, and in 1823 a new congress declared Mexico a republic. In 1845 the US voted to annex Texas, initiating the Mexican-American War. Under the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in 1848, Mexico ceded a vast territory in what is now the western and southwestern US. The Mexican government endured several rebellions and civil wars in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. During World War II it declared war on the Axis powers (1942), and in the postwar era it was a founding member of the UN (1945) and the Organization of American States (1948). In 1993 it ratified the North American Free Trade Agreement. The election of Vicente Fox to the presidency in 2000 ended 71 years of rule by the Institutional Revolutionary Party.

Recent Developments

The most serious challenge confronting Mexico was an increasingly violent struggle against drug traffickers. Since assuming office in 2006, Pres. Felipe Calderón had dispatched approximately 40,000 army troops and federal police officers to different Mexican states in a high-visibility offensive against drug cartels. During 2008 the government arrested several prominent traffickers and maintained its policy of extraditing cartel leaders to the US. These advances, however, came at a very high price for Mexico. As shipping cocaine, marijuana, and other drugs into the US became more difficult, traffickers began selling a higher proportion of their products in Mexico, where addiction levels rose steadily. Fragmented cartels waged war against each other for control over lucrative smuggling routes, and they increasingly turned their formidable firepower (derived in large part from sophisticated armaments smuggled from the US) against army and police personnel. In a particularly gruesome turn, they frequently beheaded their victims. The violence claimed victims ranging from rival cartel members to senior federal police commanders and law-enforcement personnel to innocent bystanders. Furthermore, the overall incidence of drug-related violence was on the rise, with more than 6,500 deaths in 2008. Mexico-US relations during the year focused heavily on the challenges posed by illegal drug trafficking and undocumented migration. The Mexican government objected to US congressional amendments that conditioned proposed aid on the Mexican military's human rights record, and it insisted that the US government do more to control the flow of illegal firearms into Mexico. Following lengthy bilateral negotiations, in June 2008 the US Congress finally approved revised legislation that provided a US$400 million aid package to Mexico during the first year of a three-year technical assistance program known as the Mérida Initiative.

Background

The islands of Micronesia were probably settled by people from eastern Melanesia some 3,500 years ago. Europeans first landed on the islands in the 16th century. Spain took control of the islands in 1886 and then sold them to Germany in 1899. The islands came under Japanese rule after World War I. They were captured by US forces during World War II, and in 1947 they became a UN trust territory administered by the US. The group of islands centered on the Caroline Islands became an internally self-governing federation in 1979. In 1986 the Federated States of Micronesia (FSM) entered into a Compact of Free Association with the US, which was amended in 2003. In the early 21st century, Micronesia found itself threatened by rising water levels.

Recent Developments

The economy of the FSM contracted by an estimated 3.5% in 2008. Meanwhile, external debt equaled 25.1% of GDP. The FSM remained highly dependent on US government transfers provided under the amended Compact of Free Association, which represented 65% of the FSM's revenue, and on payments by the US to the FSM Trust Fund, which would eventually replace compact income.

Background

Moldova, once part of the principality of Moldavia, was founded by the Vlachs in the 14th century. In the mid-16th century it was under Ottoman rule.

In 1774 it came under Russian control and lost portions of its territory. In 1859 it joined with the principality of Walachia to form the state of Romania, and in 1918 some of the territory it had ceded earlier also joined Romania. Romania was compelled to cede some of the Moldavian area to Russia in 1940, and that area combined with what Russia already controlled to become the Moldavian SSR. In 1991 Moldavia declared independence from the Soviet Union. It adopted the Romanian spelling of Moldova after having legitimized the use of the Roman rather than the Cyrillic alphabet in 1989. It was admitted to the UN in 1992.

Recent Developments

Moldovan Pres. Vladimir Voronin met in January 2008 with his Russian counterpart, Vladimir Putin, and in August with Putin's successor, Dmitry Medvedev. The future of the breakaway territory of Transdniestria dominated the talks. In a referendum held in 2006, 97% of Transdniestrian residents had expressed a desire to join the Russian Federation, but the Russian preference was for a reunified Moldova in which the breakaway region would enjoy substantial autonomy and be able to influence the central government. In April, for the first time since 2001, Voronin met with Igor Smirnov (the leader of the Transdniestrian regime), with whom he agreed to launch confidence-building measures designed to lead eventually to reunification.

Background

Inhabited since prehistoric times, Monaco was known to the Phoenicians, Greeks, Carthaginians, and Romans. In 1191 the Genoese took possession of it; in 1297 the reign of the Grimaldi family began. The Grimaldis allied themselves with France except for the period 1524–1641, when they were under the protection of Spain. France annexed Monaco in 1793, and it remained under French control until the fall of Napoleon, when the Grimaldis returned. In 1815 it was put under the protection of Sardinia. A treaty in 1861 called for the sale of the towns of Menton and Roquebrune to France and the establishment of Monaco's independence. It joined the UN in 1993. In 1997 the 700-year rule of the Grimaldis, then under Prince Rainier III, was celebrated. Although not a member of the EU, Monaco adopted the euro as its currency in 2002.

Recent Developments

Monaco's land-reclamation project, which would increase the principality's area by approximately 10 ha (about 25 ac), was put on hold in December 2008 because of environmental concerns and the financial climate.

Background

In Neolithic times Mongolia was inhabited by small groups of nomads. During the 3rd century bc it became the center of the Xiongnu empire. Turkic-speaking peoples held sway in the 4th–10th centuries ad. In the early 13th century Genghis Khan united the Mongol tribes and conquered central Asia. His successor, Ogodei, conquered the Chin dynasty of China in 1234. Kublai Khan established the Yuan, or Mongol, dynasty in China in 1279. After the 14th century the Ming dynasty of China confined the Mongols to their homeland in the steppes; later they became part of the Chinese Ch'ing dynasty. Inner Mongolia was incorporated into China in 1644. After the fall of the Ch'ing dynasty in 1911, Mongol princes declared Mongolia's independence from China, and in 1921 Russian forces helped drive off the Chinese. The Mongolian People's Republic was established in 1924 and recognized by China in 1946. The nation adopted a new constitution in 1992 and shortened its name to Mongolia.

Recent Developments

Despite the fall in the world prices of some metal commodities, Mongolia's outlook for 2009 was positive. The Finance Ministry in October 2008 projected economic growth topping 14% and unemployment under 3%. A leading producer of copper, silver, gold, and uranium, among other metals, Mongolia in March 2009 announced the completion of a survey indicating large uranium reserves in the Dornod project area in the northeast of the country. Production there was to begin in the next three years.

Background

The Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes was created after the collapse of Austria-Hungary at the end of World War I. The country signed treaties with Czechoslovakia and Romania in 1920–21, marking the beginning of the Little Entente. In 1929 an absolute monarchy was established, the country's name was changed to Yugoslavia, and it was divided into regions without regard to ethnic boundaries. Axis powers invaded Yugoslavia in 1941, and German, Italian, Hungarian, and Bulgarian troops occupied it for the rest of World War II. In 1945 the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was established; it included the republics of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Macedonia, Montenegro, Serbia, and Slovenia. Its independent form of communism under Josip Broz Tito's leadership provoked the USSR. Internal ethnic tensions flared up in the 1980s, causing the country's ultimate collapse. In 1991–92 independence was declared by Croatia, Slovenia, Macedonia, and Bosnia and Herzegovina; the new Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (containing roughly 45% of the population and 40% of the area of its predecessor) was proclaimed by Serbia and Montenegro. Still fueled by long-standing ethnic tensions, hostilities continued into the 1990s. Despite the approval of the Dayton Peace Agreement (1995), sporadic fighting continued and was followed in 1998–99 by Serbian repression and expulsion of ethnic populations in the province of Kosovo. In September–October 2000, the battered nation of Yugoslavia ended the autocratic rule of Pres. Slobodan Milosevic. In April 2001 he was arrested and in June extradited to The Hague to stand trial for war crimes, genocide, and crimes against humanity committed during the fighting in Kosovo. In February 2003 both houses of the Yugoslav federal legislature voted to accept a new state charter and change the name of the country from Yugoslavia to Serbia and Montenegro. Henceforth, defense, international political and economic relations, and human rights matters would be handled centrally, while all other functions would be run from the republican capitals, Belgrade and Podgorica, respectively. A provision was included for both states to vote on independence after three years, and in June 2006 Montenegro's parliament declared the republic's independence, severing some 88 years of union with Serbia.

Recent Developments

Montenegro's marked economic improvement continued to attract foreign investors in 2008, especially for tourism and construction projects. The World Travel and Tourism Council ranked Montenegro as a top tourism destination, with growth estimated at 10% annually through 2016, and 1,188,116 tourists visited the country in 2008 compared with 1,133,432 in 2007. The central bank estimated that per capita foreign direct investment was US$2,200, among the highest in Europe. The GDP growth was 18.9%; inflation fell from 7.7% in 2007 to 7.2%; and the unemployment rate dropped from 16.5% to 14.4%. In April 2008 Montenegro concluded a World Trade Organization agreement with the EU and attended a major NATO conference in Bucharest, Romania. In October Montenegro recognized Kosovo's independence. Western observers regarded the action as a snub to Serbia, Montenegro's traditional ally. Montenegro formally applied for EU membership on 15 December.

Background

The Berbers entered Morocco near the end of the 2nd millennium bc. Phoenicians established trading posts along the Mediterranean during the 12th century bc, and Carthage had settlements along the Atlantic in the 5th century bc. After the fall of Carthage, Morocco became a loyal ally of Rome, and in AD 42 it was annexed by Rome as part of the province of Mauritania. It was invaded by Muslims in the 7th century. Beginning in the mid-11th century, the Almoravids, Almohads, and Marinids ruled successively. After the fall of the Marinids in the mid-15th century, the Sa'dis ruled for a century beginning in 1550. The French fought Morocco over the Algerian boundary in the 1840s, and the Spanish seized part of Moroccan territory in 1859. It was a French protectorate from 1912 until its independence in 1956. In the mid-1970s it reasserted claim to the Western Sahara, and in 1976 Spanish troops withdrew from the region, leaving behind the Algerian-supported Saharan guerrillas of the Polisario movement. Relations with Mauritania and Algeria deteriorated, and fighting over the region continued. Attempts at mediation have repeatedly been made by the international community.

Recent Developments

Negotiations in 2008 between Morocco and the Polisario Front over the disputed region of the Western Sahara did not yield a solution. Though King Muhammad VI supported French Pres. Nicolas Sarkozy's initiative for the establishment of a Union for the Mediterranean, he did not attend the inaugural conference in July in Paris, irritated over French overtures to Algeria (where Polisario camps housed Saharawi refugees). In March 2009 Morocco severed diplomatic ties to Iran over alleged meddling in Morocco's religious affairs.

Background

Mozambique was settled by Bantu peoples about the 3rd century AD. Arab traders occupied the coastal region from the 14th century, and the Portuguese controlled the area from the early 16th century. The slave trade later became an important part of the economy. In the late 19th century private trading companies began to administer parts of the inland areas. It became an overseas province of Portugal in 1951. After years of war beginning in the 1960s, the country was granted independence in 1975. It was wracked by civil war in the 1970s and '80s. In 1990 a new constitution was promulgated, and a peace treaty was signed with the rebels in 1992. The first multiparty elections were held two years later.

Recent Developments

Following the unexpected return in May 2008 of some 26,000 Mozambicans from South Africa, a state of emergency was called. The local population in South Africa had turned on foreign workers, who, they believed, were taking jobs from South African nationals. Buildings were burned and immigrants driven from their homes, and at least 56 people, most of them Mozambicans, were killed.

Background

Myanmar, until 1989 known as Burma, has long been inhabited, with the Mon and Pyu states dominant between the 1st century BC and the 9th century AD. It was united in the 11th century under a Burmese dynasty that was overthrown by the Mongols in the 13th century. The Portuguese, Dutch, and English traded there in the 16th–17th centuries. The modern Burmese state was founded in the 18th century. It fell to the British in 1885 and became a province of India. It was occupied by Japan in World War II and became independent in 1948. A military coup took power in 1962 and nationalized major economic sectors. Civilian unrest in the 1980s led to antigovernment rioting. In 1990 opposition parties won in national elections, but the army remained in control. Trying to negotiate for a freer government amid the unrest, Aung San Suu Kyi, the National League for Democracy leader, was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1991. She spent extended periods of the 1990s and 2000s under house arrest.

Recent Developments

Tragedy struck in early May 2008 when Cyclone Nargis swept across Myanmar's Irrawaddy delta, leaving more than 138,000 dead or missing and causing more than US$4 billion in damages. The economy remained weak, with real GDP growth estimated at 0.9% and inflation at 27.7%, owing partly to the surge in food prices in the wake of the cyclone. On the positive side, export revenues were buoyant at US$3.5 billion, largely as a result of exports of oil, natural gas, and gems.

Background

Long inhabited by indigenous peoples, Namibia was explored by the Portuguese in the late 15th century. In 1884 it was annexed by Germany as German South West Africa. It was captured in World War I by South Africa, which received it as a mandate from the League of Nations in 1920 and refused to give it up after World War II. A UN resolution in 1966 ending the mandate was challenged by South Africa in the 1970s and '80s. Through long negotiations involving many factions and interests, Namibia achieved independence in 1990.

Recent Developments

A strike at TransNamib in 2008 crippled road and rail transport before the Labour Court ordered the striking workers to return to work. In April 2008 a 16th-century Portuguese trading ship that had lain undisturbed for hundreds of years on Namibia's "Skeleton Coast" was unearthed in mining operations. Although negatively affected by the global economic crisis, Namibia saw its inflation rate drop to a 19-month low in June 2009.

Military

Total active duty personnel (2007): none. Nauru does not have any military establishment. The defense is assured by Australia, but no formal agreement exists.

Background

Nauru was inhabited by Pacific islanders when British explorers arrived in 1798. Annexed by Germany in 1888, in 1919 it was placed under a joint mandate of Britain, Australia, and New Zealand. During World War II it was occupied by the Japanese. Made a UN trust territory under Australian administration in 1947, it gained independence in 1968 and became a member of the Commonwealth and the UN in 1999. Nauru once had the world's largest concentration of phosphate and became wealthy from mining and processing it. The deposits have been severely depleted, however, and the economy has been converting to fishing activities.

1 metric ton = about 1.1 short tons; 1 kilometer = 0.6 mi (statute); 1 metric ton-km cargo = about 0.68 short ton-mi cargo; c.i.f.: cost, insurance, and freight; f.o.b.: free on board

Recent Developments

In early 2008 a group of Sri Lankan refugees left Nauru for Australia, the last asylum seekers to be detained at Australia's controversial offshore immigration-processing center. Nauru's economy was badly affected by Australia's decision to close the establishment. In July, however, Australia agreed to provide US$27 million in development assistance. Nauru also was once again making money from phosphate mining, as the global food crisis had tripled the price of fertilizer.

Background

Nepal developed under early Buddhist influence, and dynastic rule dates from about the 4th century AD. It was formed into a single kingdom in 1769 and fought border wars with China, Tibet, and British India in the 18th–19th centuries. Its independence was recognized by Britain in 1923. A new constitution in 1990 restricted royal authority and accepted a democratically elected parliamentary government. The Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) began an armed insurgency in 1996. Nepal signed trade agreements with India in 1997. On 1 Jun 2001, King Birendra, the queen, and seven other members of the royal family were fatally shot by Crown Prince Dipendra, who then turned the gun on himself. After a historic vote by a constituent assembly in 2008, the monarchy was abolished and Nepal became a multiparty republic.

Recent Developments

The Maoists emerged as the largest single party after Nepal's election for its new Constituent Assembly (CA) in April 2008. At its first meeting, the CA dissolved the 240-year-old monarchy. Pushpa Kamal Dahal of the Maoists—popularly known as Prachanda—was elected prime minister, and the CA elected Ram Baran Yadav the first president of Nepal. Prachanda resigned in May 2009, however, after Yadav reversed the government's firing of the army chief, who had refused to integrate former Maoist rebels into the military. Violent protests continued in mid-2009.

Background

Celtic and Germanic tribes inhabited the Netherlands at the time of the Roman conquest. Under the Romans, trade and industry flourished, but by the mid-3rd century AD Roman power had waned, eroded by resurgent German tribes and the encroachment of the sea. A Germanic invasion (406–07) ended Roman control. The Merovingian dynasty followed the Romans but was supplanted in the 7th century by the Carolingian dynasty, which converted the area to Christianity. After Charlemagne's death in 814, the area was increasingly the target of Viking attacks. It became part of the kingdom of Lotharingia, which established an Imperial Church. In the 12th–14th centuries dike building occurred on a large scale. The dukes of Burgundy gained control in the late 14th century. By the early 16th century the Low Countries were ruled by the Spanish Habsburgs. In 1581 the seven northern provinces, led by Calvinists, declared their independence from Spain, and in 1648, following the Thirty Years' War, Spain recognized Dutch independence. The 17th century was the golden age of Dutch civilization. The Dutch East India Company secured Asian colonies, and the country's standard of living soared. In the 18th century the region was conquered by the French and became the Kingdom of Holland under Napoleon (1806). It remained neutral in World War I and declared neutrality in World War II but was occupied by Germany. It joined NATO in 1949, was a founding member of what is now the European Community, and is part of the EU.

Recent Developments

The Dutch parliament voted in July 2008 to extend the Dutch contribution to the NATO training mission in Iraq, to maintain troops in the EU's force in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and to continue its activities in Afghanistan through 2010. The economy of The Netherlands was stable in 2008, though its strongly international orientation made it vulnerable to the worldwide turbulence in the autumn. Unemployment was low at 3.8%, GDP grew by 2.1%, and the national pension and social security systems remained healthy, though public debt increased by €87 billion (US$123 billion). In light of the aging population and high standards for social services, the government offered financial incentives to individuals who would continue to work after age 62 and to employers who would hire seniors, the long-term unemployed, or those who were disabled. The Netherlands saw its first three-month decrease in the prices of homes in 18 years; the sales volume also dropped dramatically. In response to the international crisis in the banking and financial markets, the government set aside €200 billion (US$272 billion) in guarantees for interbank lending.

Background

Polynesian occupation of New Zealand dates to about AD 1000. First sighted by Dutch explorer Abel Janszoon Tasman in 1642, the main islands were charted by Capt. James Cook in 1769. Named a British crown colony in 1840, the area was the scene of warfare between colonists and native Maori through the 1860s. In 1907 the colony became the Dominion of New Zealand. It administered Western Samoa during 1919–62 and participated in both world wars. New Zealand took a strong stand against nuclear proliferation, since the mid-1980s banning nuclear-powered ships or those carrying nuclear weapons from its waters. There has been a revival of traditional Maori culture and art, and Maori social and economic activism have been central to political developments in the country since the late 20th century.

Recent Developments

After nine years in office, the Labour-led government of Prime Minister Helen Clark was defeated in elections held in New Zealand in November 2008, ceding power to an administration led by National Party leader John Key. Key initiated a 100-day action plan that included tax cuts; a line-by-line review of departmental spending; enhancement of the country's infrastructure; and a transitional relief package for those individuals worst hit by job losses. In April New Zealand became the first Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member country to conclude a comprehensive free-trade agreement with China, in a deal calculated to boost New Zealand's annual exports to China by up to NZ$400 million (about US$300 million). Under the terms of the agreement, New Zealand would concede tariff-free access to China for 96% of its products by 2019.

Background

Nicaragua has been inhabited for thousands of years, most notably by the Maya. Christopher Columbus arrived in 1502, and Spanish explorers discovered Lake Nicaragua soon thereafter. Nicaragua was governed by Spain until 1821, when it declared its independence. It was part of Mexico and then the United Provinces of Central America until 1838, when full independence was achieved. The US intervened in political affairs by maintaining troops there in 1912–33. Ruled by the dictatorial Somoza dynasty from 1936 to 1979, it was taken over by the Sandinistas after a popular revolt. They were opposed by armed insurgents, the US-backed contras, from 1981. The Sandinista government nationalized several sectors of the economy. They lost the national elections in 1990, but Sandinista leader Daniel Ortega returned to power after winning the presidential election of 2006.

Recent Developments

Nicaragua claimed US$520 million in Venezuelan aid in 2008; however, this remained off the official budget and without state oversight. The central bank of Nicaragua worked to increase foreign reserves and to return to more orthodox monetary policies aimed at controlling inflation. Nonetheless, high food and oil prices dampened economic growth while raising inflation. The government responded by increasing the minimum wage by 18%. Exports grew strongly due to rising coffee prices and expansion in the US market, and Nicaragua remained committed to the Central America–Dominican Republic Free Trade Agreement (CAFTA–DR). It sought to reduce its dependence on oil by bringing wind turbines online and by signing an agreement with Brazil to build a 160-MW hydroelectric plant.

Background

In the territory of Niger, there is evidence of Neolithic culture, and several kingdoms existed there before the colonialists arrived. First explored by Europeans in the late 18th century, it became a French colony in 1922. It became an overseas territory of France in 1946 and gained independence in 1960. The first multiparty elections were held in 1993.

Recent Developments

The Tuareg rebellion in northern Niger escalated during 2008. In January members of the Movement of Nigerians for Justice killed 7 policemen in Tanout and kidnapped 11 others, including the mayor, and confrontations continued throughout the year. In April 2009, however, it was announced that the two sides had agreed to peace at Libyan-brokered talks.

Background

Inhabited for thousands of years, Nigeria was the center of the Nok culture from 500 BC to AD 200 and of several precolonial empires, including the state of Kanem-Bornu and the Songhai, Hausa, and Fulani kingdoms. Visited in the 15th century by Europeans, it became a center for the slave trade. The area began to come under British control in 1861; by 1903 British rule was total. Nigeria gained independence in 1960 and became a republic in 1963. Ethnic strife soon led to military coups, and military groups ruled the country from 1966 to 1979 and from 1983 to 1999. A civil war between the central government and the former Eastern Region—which seceded and called itself Biafra—began in 1967 and ended in 1970 with Biafra's surrender after widespread starvation and civilian deaths. In 1991 the capital was moved from Lagos to Abuja. The government's execution of environmental activist Ken Saro-Wiwa in 1995 led to international sanctions, and civilian rule was finally reestablished in 1999. Ethnic conflicts continued in the early 21st century, as did violent protests over oil production in the Niger delta. Friction also increased between Muslims and Christians after some of the northern and central states adopted Islamic law.

Nigeria is Africa's most populous country and a land of extreme diversity, with at least 250 different ethnic groups and more than 500 spoken languages.

Recent Developments

In 2008 Nigeria's economy was severely affected by the global financial crisis. The price of crude oil, the country's major export, underwent wild fluctuations—beginning the year at US$95, peaking at US$147 in July, and then plunging below US$40 at the end of the year. Nigeria's prospects had looked hopeful midyear to realize its Vision 2020 (plans for the economy to rank in the top 20 in the world and first in Africa by 2020)—the average growth rate was about 7%, external reserves amounted to some US$63 billion, and the non-oil sector showed strong performance. By mid-October, however, the government had depleted US$14.6 billion in windfall oil profits. Violence in the Niger delta surged to new levels, pushing the region to the verge of anarchy and resulting in the loss of billions of dollars in oil revenue. A volatile mix of armed militias, unemployed youths, corrupt police and military officers, and intransigent oil companies competed for a share in oil profits. In June and September, the Movement for the Emancipation of the Niger Delta spearheaded sophisticated armed operations against the oil companies and the federal army, which forced Royal Dutch Shell to suspend production temporarily, and attacks on and kidnappings of foreign oil workers continued in 2009. Rather than address the socioeconomic roots of unrest, the government's Joint Task Force launched military attacks on rebel camps and arrested hundreds of suspected militants.

Background

Several principalities were united into the kingdom of Norway in the 11th century. From 1380 it had the same king as Denmark until it was ceded to Sweden in 1814. The union with Sweden was dissolved in 1905, and Norway's economy grew rapidly. The country remained neutral during World War I, although its shipping industry played a vital role in the conflict. It declared its neutrality in World War II but was invaded and occupied by German troops. Norway is a member of NATO but turned down membership in the EU in 1994. Its economy grew consistently during the 1990s.

Recent Developments

Norway's economy remained strong in 2008 despite turbulence in the global financial market. Oil prices reached new heights in the summer before retreating in the autumn, and exports of fish and industrial products continued to expand. GDP growth was 2.0%, and employment grew by 3.2%. However, inflation reached 3.5% during the year and manufacturing fell 4.0%. During the global financial crisis that began in September, the Government Pension Fund experienced big losses in its investments in international financial instruments. Economists proclaimed that such a large fund with long-term investments could handle short-term losses.

Background

Oman has been inhabited for at least 10,000 years. Arabs began migrating there in the 9th century ac. Tribal warfare was endemic until the conversion to Islam in the 7th century ad. It was ruled by Ibadi imams until 1154, when a royal dynasty was established. The Portuguese controlled the coastal areas from about 1507 to 1650, when they were expelled. The Al Bu Sa'id dynasty, founded in the mid-18th century, still rules Oman. Oil was discovered in 1964. In 1970 the sultan was deposed by his son, who began a policy of modernization, and under him the country joined the Arab League and the UN. In the Persian Gulf War, Oman cooperated with the allied forces against Iraq. In the 1990s it continued to expand its foreign relations.

Recent Developments

Petroleum prices remained crucial to Oman's economy, which grew 6% in 2008, allowing continued expansion of the sultanate's burgeoning tourism and transportation sectors. Three new airports were opened, and Vogue magazine declared Oman the top travel destination for 2008. Meanwhile, the port of Salalah gained the distinction of being the only port between Europe and Singapore that could handle the world's largest container vessels.

Background

Pakistan has been inhabited since about 3500 bc. From the 3rd century bc to the 2nd century ad, it was part of the Mauryan and Kushan kingdoms. The first Muslim conquests were in the 8th century ad. The British East India Company subdued the reigning Mughal dynasty in 1757. During the period of British colonial rule, what is now Pakistan was part of India. When the British withdrew in 1947, the new state of Pakistan came into existence by act of the British Parliament. Kashmir remained a disputed territory between Pakistan and India, resulting in full-scale war in 1965 and continued military clashes. Civil war between East Pakistan and West Pakistan resulted in independence for the former, which became Bangladesh, in 1971. Many Afghan refugees migrated to Pakistan during the Soviet-Afghan war in the 1980s. Pakistan elected Benazir Bhutto prime minister in 1988; she was the first woman to head a modern Islamic state. She was ousted in 1990 on charges of corruption and incompetence. During the 1990s border flare-ups with India continued, and Pakistan conducted tests of nuclear weapons. Pakistan's political landscape changed dramatically after the terrorist attacks of September 11. It was quickly determined that they had been staged by the Muslim militant organization al-Qaeda, which was operating out of Afghanistan with the support of the Taliban regime, with which Pakistan had diplomatic relations. As the US prepared to move militarily against both organizations, Pakistan chose to provide support to the US-led coalition.

Recent Developments

Suicide bombings, assassinations, and military operations against terrorists remained the top preoccupations in Pakistan. In September 2008 Islamabad cited 88 suicide attacks, causing 1,188 deaths, since mid-2007—twice as high as the toll from the previous five years. In February a suicide bomber killed the army's surgeon general, and in November the former commander of the Special Services Group was murdered. Government negotiators and pro-Taliban militants in the Swat valley signed a peace agreement in May. Fighting involving US-led coalition forces in Afghanistan spilled over into Pakistan throughout the year, and it was revealed that US Special Forces had been authorized to operate in Pakistan. Despite Pakistani protestations, numerous US drone attacks claimed an increasing number of al-Qaeda and Taliban operatives. Militants were not subdued, however. Islamabad's Marriott Hotel was demolished by a truck bomb in September, killing at least 54. In late November Pakistan-based terrorists struck multiple targets in Mumbai (Bombay), killing at least 174. In March 2009 an ambush of the Sri Lankan cricket team in Lahore left six policemen and two bystanders dead. In response, the International Cricket Council stripped Pakistan of its hosting duties for the 2011 Cricket World Cup. Throughout the first half of 2009, Pakistani forces battled militants in the tribal areas near the border with Afghanistan, and the peace accord in the Swat valley was effectively abandoned.
